Young's Strain S. C. W. Leghorns

I Have No Other Breeds

My strain again for the 6th consecutive year shows its superiority by winning more prizes at Madison Square Garden, New York, in the strongest competition ever known, than all others combined, including 17 specials, and again winning the National S. C. W. Leghorn silver cup. Two weeks later I almost duplicated my wonderful win of last year at Boston by winning 9 prizes on 9 entries against the most prominent breeders of the east. My winnings for 1906 at the world's two greatest shows are as follows:

BOSTON.	NEW YORK.
Pen, 1st.	Pen, 4th.
Pullets, 2nd, 3rd.	Pullets, 1st, 2nd, 5th.

Editorial Gossip

The League of New England Poultry Association has completed its organization. George V. Smith, of New Haven, and W. R. Graves, of Springfield, have been elected, the former as President, the latter as Secretary. This is a good move toward State organizations, and it is hoped that each State will do likewise. Connecticut has completed a good State organization that is doing a work of benefit in the interest of poultry.

The Newark Show, of Newark, N. J., has held two most successful exhibitions along new lines, the greatest innovation of which is free admission to the exhibition. This has brought wonderfully large crowds, and has so benefited the exhibitors as to assure the continuance and prosperity of the association.

The organization of State leagues, and perhaps holding of poultry exhibits in rural localities may be the solution to a better organization of poultrymen throughout the country. Organization is the one sure road to success, and perhaps free admission to the poultry exhibitions may be the means of creating thousands of fanciers to the benefit of the breeders that have never known the delights of poultry culture.

Chicken-pox seems to have been more prevalent last fall than we have ever known. Almost every publication that devotes a portion of its space to chicken lore, has had more or less communications and inquiries as to the cause and possible means of preventing or curing this ailment. There has been an unusual amount of carelessness displayed amongst exhibitors, fall fair management and early winter poultry exhibitions in permitting the exhibition of poultry affected with chicken-pox and other ailments. Oft-times large exhibits are permitted to be cooped and shown that should be excluded from the grounds. The anxiety for numbers in the department has led to too much leniency in the careful scrutinization of the sanitary condition and health of the exhibit.

For a while there was a great deal of uneasiness expressed as to the ability of the experts selected to place the awards at a number of fall fair exhibits. This comes with every season, and is usually to be blamed upon the exhibitors themselves. Poultrymen dwelling in the locality where the display is to be made can always influence the selection of the judge, if they will apply to the management of the fair in time to prevent the engagement of any judge against whom they may have a prejudice.

No one should ever find fault with any proceeding which they might have prevented through a few words spoken in time. Begin at once to get ready for this feature of next fall's exhibition. Visit the management of your coming County Fair as soon as possible, and urge upon them the necessity of a competent superintendent and well-informed judge, and the enforcement of the best sanitary conditions for the protection of the exhibitors.

We noticed a long article recently written as to poultry on the farm. This article tells us that "the two things necessary to produce large quantities of eggs from fowls, are, first, proper food, and, second, a strong constitution." If the writer had added, "and bred for laying, and properly housed," he would have the problem solved.

One of the most interesting visitors at the late New York show was Mr. Graham, connected with the Poultry Department of the Experimental Station in Canada. Mr. Graham remarked that the great secret of success with the undertaking in Canada was that they all worked together. The Canadian fanciers, poultrymen, and experts, each and everyone, overtime and always, are for Canadian supremacy. This is right and proper, and it would be well for the fanciers and breeders of the entire country to follow their land.

The cold storage men have had their inning. The open winter and plenty of fresh-laid eggs to satisfy the longing of the high-priced market in place of the storage eggs has reduced the possibility of profit to such an extent as to make the storage people wish that ice and snow had covered this portion of the continent for a number of weeks back. There are some things that can be corralled into a monopoly, but so long as there are more hens grown every year to produce the eggs, it will be pretty hard to control the egg market.

A recent fire in some of the large commission houses gave an example of the destructiveness of a fire where large numbers of eggs are stored. The water which was thrown upon the fire brought forth from the building a flood of eggs. Some of the bystanders remarked: "Can it be possible that eggs are so plentiful as to flood like a river through the streets of the City?" The sight was truly a novel one—the water, the eggs, and the just fallen snow intermingling to an amusing extent.

Mr. Graham, in charge of the Poultry Department of Connecticut Agricultural College has made a long stride through his bulletins in an effort to teach the amateur poultry raisers how to succeed. Mr. Graham was the leading spirit in the State Poultry organization, has pushed hard and strong for representative speakers on poultry topics at the Farmers' Institutes, at poultry shows, and elsewhere. This Mr. Graham is a brother of the one in Canada. Both have the determination and ability to succeed.

Too much consideration can not be given to carefully selecting the eggs for the incubator. Well-formed, smooth-shelled, perfect eggs of good, medium size are the best, discarding the ill-shaped, undersized or unusually large eggs. Too much care and judgment can not be used in selecting the product from which the pullets of another season will be hatched. If the same interest was given to these things as is given to selecting the specimens to go into the exhibition halls, there would be better quality when the show season is at hand. Poultrymen become overly anxious to have a lot of young chicks in the spring, and have plenty of time to repent of their folly and haste when the show season comes in the fall.

Farm Stock Journal pays unusual attention to matters pertaining to poultry and matters of like character. They copied a short time since from the pages of the "Feather" an illustration of Bordeaux pigeons, but they gave full credit, which many often neglect.

It is just as well to experiment with trap nests and learn the egg-producing value of your flock. Trap nests, green cut-bone, clover or alfalfa hay are all as necessary for the winter care of fowls as are grain and water themselves. The trap nests are the only sure way to know the hens that produce the desirable number of eggs to recommend them as a selection from which to have the eggs for hatching this spring.

Fluffs have found their way into Wisconsin. They are described as being quite docile, somewhat larger than the Leghorns and smaller than the Asiatic. This is about as good a description as we have seen of the Fluffs. We have had several inquiries lately about them. Can not some breeder or exhibitor, thoroughly well acquainted with them, write an article describing them and send to us for publication, and furnish some photographs of a number in a group to go with the article?

Everyone interested in poultry that has a farm should write to the Department of Agriculture and get all the information they can as to the growing of alfalfa, and plant a setting of same, if only an acre or two for the sake of having alfalfa hay over winter for the fowls. Nothing in the way of green food is half so good for poultry as short cut alfalfa hay.

Turkeys are reported to have sold in the Klondike regions at forty-two cents a pound last Thanksgiving time for the canned variety, and $1.00 per pound for the whole bird. Notwithstanding these high prices, Dawson City had a Thanksgiving and Christmas celebration. Some of the current quotations tells us that corn meal sold at ten cents a pound, starch and potatoes at twenty-five cents per pound, while eggs brought the delicate price of $18 a case.

Now is the time to get ready for the young chicks that are to be the early fall show winners. It is never too early to hatch the chicks, provided you are properly equipped to care for them. If you are not, it is best to delay until the near approach of seasonable weather before doing much with the young chicks. We know the incubator and brooder can be used at any time, but the old mother hen with a brood of early-hatched chicks, nicely snuggled away under the shelter of a dry, open shed in a warm chicken coop is the pride of every fancier's heart who hopes to win the blue ribbon the coming season.

The people of Nebraska held a great poultry exhibition in that State. Professor Brigham, formerly of the Rhode Island Agricultural College, is living, or rather staying the present winter in the far West, and gave an address on practical ideas at the State Poultry Show gathering. Mr. Brigham is doing good work for poultry in the far West. We hear that there is a possibility of his locating permanently near the City of Washington.

The annual exhibition of the Electric City Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association held at Schenectady, N. Y., recently, in point of quality, was the best seen at the Armory in several years.

The entries were as large as ever, and the cooping was nicely arranged, single tiers being used for the large birds, and double tiers for the bantams and pigeons. The Hon. H. S. Wemple, president of the Empire Cooping Company, surprised himself by being present at the show, but claimed he had to look after the boys who did the cooping for his firm. Brother Marsh Wemple was in Indianapolis, but brother Seymour did the honors in great shape. As one of the fanciers remarked: "Those Wemple boys are a pair of apricots when it comes to handling shows and entertaining the fanciers."

The management of the show was first class, all the officers being earnest in their desire to please the exhibitors and the public. The judging was completed on the second day, all ribbons being put up as fast as the awards were sent in.

The American classes of course were the leaders, and brought out some remarkably fine birds, in fact, there were winners at some of the big shows that had a hard fight to land the blue ribbon, and in some instances, had to give away to several dark horses.

Barred Rocks were a strong and fine class, notably winning pens, cockerels and hens. Several very fine pullets were shown, but some lacked development to show at their best. The cock class was very good as far as some of the winners were concerned. White Rocks had small but good classes. Buff Rocks were exceedingly fine, especially first pen of young, a good even colored lot. First Cockerel was a beauty in color, fine shape, and when tail develops fully will be a very dangerous competitor in the warmest company. The second is a more stylish bird, but not as even in all sections as the winner.

Wyandottes were as strong as usual in Whites and Buffs as far as numbers were concerned. The Whites averaged very high in quality—cocks being good, some exceptionally so; hens were good in type and sound in color as to winners; Cockerels made up the best bunch of the season, first being a dream in perfect Wyandotte shape, a beautiful bird to look at, the fine and graceful curved lines of neck, back, tail, breast and body, making him an ideal in this respect. His plumage was white, his head points very good, albeit his comb was a trifle coarse—his only real defect. The second was another handsome specimen, sound in color, fine in comb and head, and good in shape. The rest of the winners were close up, and good enough for the best of shows. Pullets had a pair of beauties in first and second, typical in shape and fine in color. Winning pens were above the average in quality.

Buff Wyandottes were simply loaded down with quality, first and second cock being a splendid pair. First cockerel was the most typical Buff in shape we have handled this year, and very good in color. The winning pullets were very sound in color, and the first pen was strictly gilt edged.

Silver Wyandottes were represented by only a few, but were very fine, notably first pullet, a very even open laced bird that showed careful breeding, and barring her size and weight, is one of the best of the season. The second is another good one, but with heavier lacing, still the centers were pure white and of correct Wyandotte feather lines. The rest of the Wyandotte classes were small, but very good in quality.

The Rhode Island Red classes were about as good in quality as we ever handled. Quite a number of famous blue ribbon winners at the big shows were entered, and had a hard time to win out, in fact in several instances they were not "in the blue," and in one case not even "in the red." The star boarder in the Rhode Island Red class was the first single combed cockerel, a beautiful bird in type, fine in comb and head points, good in size and weight, color a most even brilliant red in hackle and saddle, with other sections harmonizing. Notably fine were the winning single combed and rose combed pullets, and first pens in both single and rose combs.

Although we did not handle the other classes at Schenectady, we are glad to state that with some rare exceptions, the quality was above good in most varieties. Leghorns were particularly strong in Browns, as far as quality was concerned, and some very good Whites, and a few rarely good Buffs were shown. Asiatic classes were light, but some good Brahmas were in evidence. There was a very strong Houdan class, with several very fine specimens among the winners. The bantam display was very good, but might have been larger, considering the number of bantam breeders in this neck of the woods. There was a large display of pheasants, and the largest collection of Indian Runner ducks we have seen at a show in many months. And they were very good ones.

Dr. E. E. Reynolds had quite a large and fine string of Sicilian Buttercups at Schenectady, and a novelty in the way of White Sicilians.

Dr. A. T. Sitterly, president of the Schenectady Show, is going deep into Silver Sebrights this season. He had a fine string at the show, but expects to send over to England for a bunch of fine breeders.

Secretary I. L. Whitmyre and treasurer Wm. F. Smith worked hard all the week, and were ably assisted by George R. Shauber. The latter was the happiest man in town over his winning first White Wyandotte Cockerel. He has reason to be.

"Ed" De Graff spent a good portion of the evenings at the show looking his birds over. He bids fair to be Rhode Island Red King in the future to judge by the quality of his stock and the large number he has on his big ranch. He is very sweet on Columbian Wyandottes, and showed a star pullet, color of hackle and tail being equal to the best of Light Brahma hackles and tails.

C. W. Lombard is another hard worker in a show, and made it pleasant for the writer in handling the birds. Lombard, while quite a Houdan fancier, is going deep into Silver Pencilled Hamburgs, and will import a string from the other side shortly.

The Rev. R. Brooks Robbins was a very busy director and highly enthusiastic over his Buff Wyandottes. He showed about the best string of the latter since he started years ago, and he always had fine ones.

The entry fee at Madison Square Garden next year will be raised to three dollars a bird, and pens to ten dollars we understand. This is done to limit the entry, and enable single instead of double tierings. Poultry publications will be charged for space the same as supply dealers. This is, no doubt, fair, but the New York Poultry and Pigeon Society should pay for the advertising, now free, if such is to be the rule. The New York Show, under Mr. Crawford's management, has been a paying function, and the stock today is valuable, in fact cannot be bought.

A movement is on foot to start another New York Show, with the purpose of retaining a lower entry fee, and encouraging the smaller breeders. This show, we understand, will be held in November, or early in December, and will have ample backing in the way of cash and the support of a number of very good fanciers.

There will be something doing in A. P. A. matters this coming year. There is a determined opposition in the East to the methods that have been in vogue in the past, and steps are being taken to have the old association incorporated and run on a business basis with permanent headquarters in one place. The next meeting should be held in New York, where at least a very large and representative gathering of members of the American Poultry Association is assured.

A big string of birds of the American varieties will be sent to the Palace and International Shows in England next November. The details will be published in a few weeks.

Concentrated poultry rations, so much talked of, are not good for the poultry. Too much concentrated food does not seem to be suitable to the hen; she must have a sufficient amount of roughage. Nothing is better for this than alfalfa or clover hay. It helps out a little in reducing the disadvantages of a heavy grain ration.

It is surprising the number of inquiries that come asking where eggs from heavy laying strains can be secured. It is just as well for poultrymen to begin to attend o this branch of the trade. Trap-nest your hens, keep records, post the community on what your hens are doing by advertising the results, and build up for yourself a reputation for heavy laying strains.

Farm and Home tells us that alfalfa grows best in a little sandy loam, underlaid by a loose permeable subsoil. If the subsoil is heavy and stiff and impervious to water, the crop will not be a success for any length of time. The land must be well drained, for the plant is sensitive to stagnant water. In addition, you must have the proper life in the soil for producing alfalfa.

An inquirer asks, "Do incubators pay?" It is rather late in the history of poultry culture to question the value of artificial hatching machines. More than one-half of all the poultry grown at the present time are grown by artificial means. Incubators and brooders are as necessary at the present time to the poultry plant as a sewing machine or bread board in housekeeping.

We notice in print the recommendatio that in saving eggs for incubation in dry climate, it is best to keep them in a fairly cool place, and cover the box or basket with a damp cloth.This might be good advice for warm weather in a very dry climate, but quite unnecessary anywhere outside the arid districts of the West. No one should ever attempt to keep eggs for hatching in an overly warm temperature. Between 50 and 60 degrees is considered the best. Never keep eggs in a close confined room that is heated by an airtight stove, furnace or steampipe. Never wash eggs that are to be sent to market, if you can possibly prevent it. Perfectly clean nests will prevent soiled egg shells. If you have a few soiled eggs, use them at home, and send the nice clean ones to market. Where they must be cleaned, if possible, scrape them with a piece of glass carefully, or use a piece of sandpaper to removes the dirt. Washing destroys the appearance of the eggs through removing the natural gloss upon the surface. This gloss helps the appearance and prevents the too quick evaporation through the partial closing of the pores of the shell.

Hens are likely to lay soft-shelled eggs at this season of the year. Too much corn and too little grit and oyster shell is responsible for this. If poultry have plenty of exercise, but little corn, plenty of clover hay and wheat, and a lot of scratching to do to get their food, there will not be many soft-shelled eggs from the flock. Selecting the best for breeding should have immediate attention. It is more than a waste of time on a small plant to hatch an egg from a hen of indifferent quality. The average quality is poor enough at best from the best hens you can obtain. This being true, why waste time and space and food on chicks hatched from undesirable parents.

More people should grow bees. They should permit the bees to gather and manufacture their own honey-comb. Beeswax is selling in the market at from forty to fifty cents per pound. Perhaps it would be easier to have a few pounds of wax and a few gallons of strained honey, than to neglect the possibility of having same where there are natural conveniences for obtaining them.

On top of this come the writings and inquiries as to the ailments of ducks. There are scarcely any diseases whatever among a flock of ducks that are kept reasonably clean and properly fed. In fact, the growers of ducks say the per cent of loss after three days old is so small as to have but little consideration, but just let a rat or two, or vermin of any kind get into a flock of young ducklings, and the destruction is terrible.

BROODER-RAISED CHICKS

We noticed some time ago an article in the Southern Poultry Journal with reference to the raising of incubator chicks. One paragraph of the article that attracted our attention was this: "The feed I use is cornmeal scalded with boiling water, not hot water. Mix until you have a crumbled mass, never wet. Cover and let stand until cold enough for the chicks to eat. Feed just a little of this five or six times a day, allowing the chicks to come out into the outer run to feed, then drive them back and close them in until you come again to feed them. Never fail to scald your meal thoroughly or you will certainly have bowel trouble. After the chicks are three or four days old you may add hard-boiled eggs if you wish. This will help them."

The party who writes this article claims to have been quite successful in growing incubator-hatched chicks in the brooder. We have been taught that the most dangerous food possible to be fed to young chicks is a cornmeal ration, and when egg is added to this you have such a rich, heavy, fattening ration that the great majority of poultry growers would stare in amazement at anyone who might recommend the use of such food to young chicks.

Not long since, at a Farmers' Institute, we listened to the lecturer of the day—one selected to talk on poultry. The subject selected was the "Feeding of Young Chicks." The lecturer stated that he fed nothing but ground corn; or, in other words, yellow cornmeal, mixed with scalding hot water, for the first three weeks of the chick's life. After the lecture was over there was a loud clamor from many of those present, asking questions about the feeding of the cornmeal. Those present stated that they had been much disappointed in the use of such a ration, and they could not imagine how it would be possible for anyone to succeed when it was used entire without any other food. At the close of the lecture we talked with the lecturer and he told us that he raised from three hundred to five hundred young chicks each season, and that he never fed them anything but the scalded cornmeal until they were large enough to eat cracked corn. After that they were fed the scalded meal once a day, and the cracked corn furnished the balance of their food throughout the entire summer.

Such a method dumbfounded those of us who have spent dozens of years in studying how to prevent the mortality that comes in such startling numbers to many of our flock, and we thought that it had been long ago settled decidedly that the feeding of cornmeal was the last thing to be thought of as a steady ration for the growing chicks.

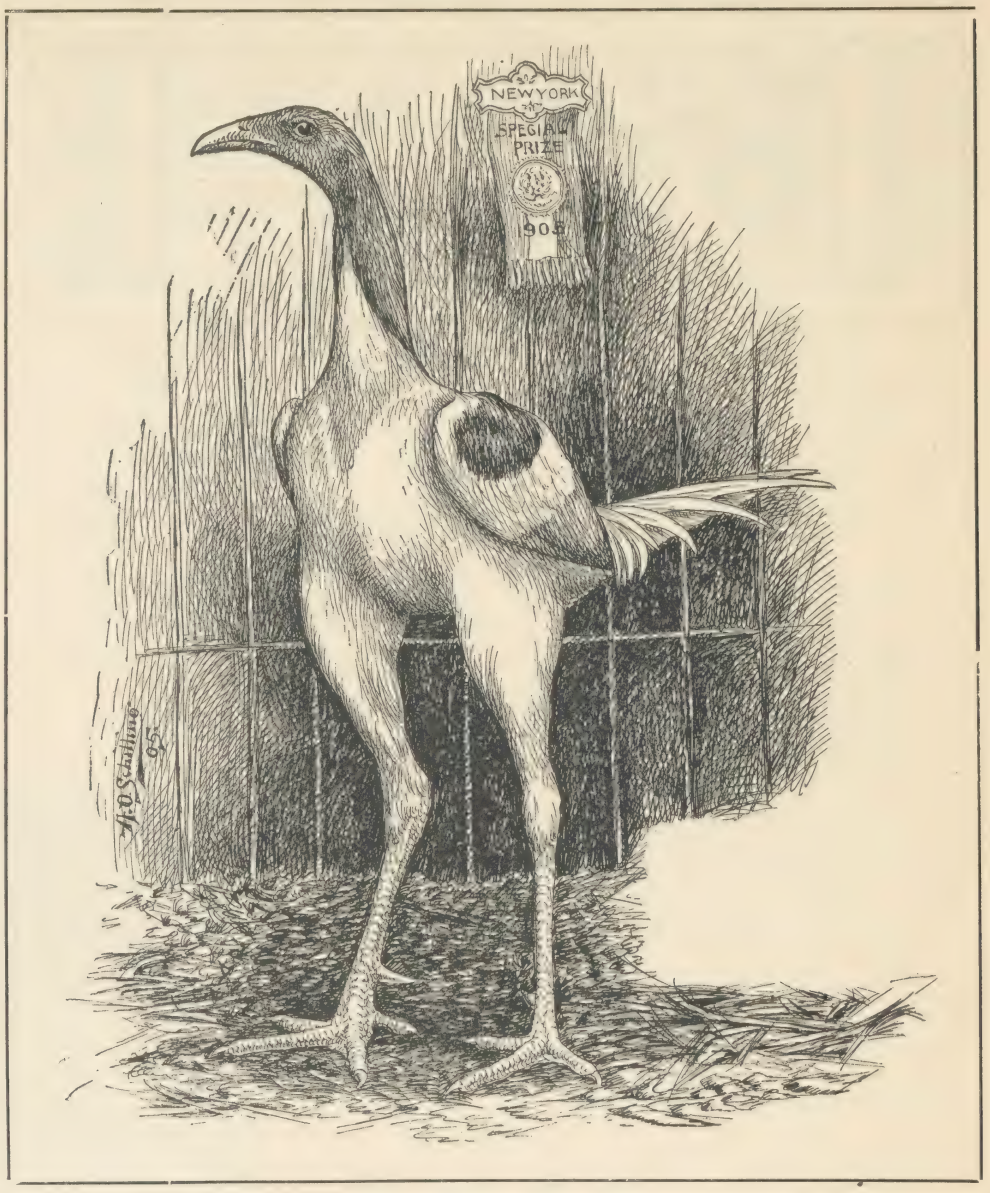
We know that many years ago our grandmothers mixed the cornmeal with cold water and scattered it on the ground for the young chicks to eat. We also know that the chicks that were grown in those early days were the old barnyard type that had come up through the survival of the fittest; but it was thought at that time that no other food was fit for the young chicks and very little calculation was made as to the number that were grown, just so there was enough for the family table. Notwithstanding such statements are often read in the paper and listened to from the lecturer, we scarcely think that anyone thoroughly versed in the growing of young chicks would consider for one moment the advisability of feeding cornmeal as an entire ration to young chicks.

We also noticed in the Wisconsin paper the following remarks on raising broilers. The writer states:

"Broiler raising is truly a winter business, and no one should look upon it from any other standpoint. That is one of the reasons why I am so enthusiastic; because it fits in so nicely, either with other farm work or branches of poultry raising. In either case, if well understood and properly attended to at the outset, it is the most profitable part of the poultry business. My experience of over seventeen years should qualify me to make such statements.

"I know of no other branch of agriculture that needs such perfect control as the broiler business; and while there are many monuments standing that point to failures, there are those of the agricultural people who are doing remarkably well with broiler growing."

This brings strongly to the front the fact that we have always stood up for, that the farm is the proper and most profitable spot whereon poultry may be grown. Throughout France, Belgium, and Denmark it is the small farms that grow the poultry and produce the eggs. This should be the same in this country, for every branch of poultry growing may be most successfully and profitably carried on upon every farm if those in charge will simply give their time and attention to the proper development of it.



The fact that broilers can be most profitably grown during the winter months is the strong feature in favor of this branch of the industry. Every farmer in the United States might grow during the winter months a few hundred broilers and sell them at profitable prices just as spring opens, when other work is at hand.

The same writer states as follows: "All people are not adapted to the raising of broilers. A person must have a special liking for it and the little helpless pets that are to come under their charge. The business is not as it once was. The demand has more than doubled, but we do not get get such fabulous prices any more. Times are constantly changing. Cold storage has come to stay, which works somewhat against big prices for broilers, but we must at all times strive to adapt ourselves to conditions and arrange our business accordingly. I believe, however, that prices are greater today than they were fifteen years ago, owing to the fact that we have become masters of our business and are enabled to control it."

There is much of good, sound reasoning in the above paragraph. All persons are not adapted to poultry growing. Some never succeed in the attempt, while others are most successful. This is the same with all kinds of live-stock, and farm work as well. Some will succeed with one thing and some with another, but there is usually in every family in the rural districts one or more suited to the growing of poultry. Such should be encouraged and aided in a reasonable way to embark in this branch of the live-stock business which is absolutely certain to become the most profitable of all stock growing in the future. The only competitor of the poultry and egg-producing business is the cold storage, and this cannot prosper unless the product to be placed therein has been grown, and the storage-housekeeper can not afford to sell his products for less than they cost him, and it is an absolute certainty that they have cost more when they are taken out than they were worth when placed therein, so the cold storage proposition is one that works both ways. They can take care of your products when there is no other sale for them, and they are not likely to cut the price but very little under what the product is worth furnished at the time the sale is made.

There is considerable talk about the cold storage business. Nothing, however, has been of so much advantage to the milk-producer, the egg-producer, the meat-producer, the best poultry producer, the producers of cheese, fruits, and products of all kinds which may be placed with safety in the cold-storage house, with full assurance that it will be good for use at whatever time it may be needed. It would be impossible to supply the people of the world at the present time with all the necessaries of life if it were not for the cold storage. Cold-storage eggs never have been and never will be in competition with fresh-laid eggs; nor will cold-storage poultry of any kind ever be in competition with the very best of the fresh-killed, fresh-dressed poultry. Fine quality in a fresh product need fear no competition with packed products in any part of the world.

The question of growing broilers, and more poultry and eggs for market, upon the farm, is receiving surprising attention throughout the entire world at the present time. Some governments of foreign countries are lending their aid and putting forth every effort possible to assist their people in the production of more and better poultry and eggs. This is done because it is a business that can be carried on in a small way by almost everyone, and its following not only insures a living for those who grow it, but the business ranks among the safest in the world, as it is a growing one, and the demand in the future will be even greater than now.

BROWN'S BUDGET

The crying need is for more turkey raisers. We want more Sherman Hartwells, McClaves, Wolfes, Rowes, and Crangles. The great American bird should be more widely disseminated, or else there will soon have to be fewer holiday occasions. Let us have more turkeys.

The hens need grit in winter whether they are laying or not. And the owner who has to buy all the feed needs grit too, and he has to have the sand to buy the feed. "There will come a time" when the owner of the flock will hear the hens advertising the fact they are laying.

The value of a note book in poultry raising is not properly appreciated. Note indications that follow treatment for any ailment; whether certain radical change of foods has any effect on egg laying or changes the condition of the bowels, etc. Experiments cannot be successfully carried out, or as accurately, unless notes are made. The poultryman who is satisfied with existing conditions is merely existing himself. New conditions in the line of improvement is always in order.

Every man's breed is the best, because that is the one above all others he fancies. It is this reason that brings marked success with the respective breeds. It is the specialty breeder that makes the greatest hit. He can devote all his study, energy and time to his one idea.

Oh my, but the poultry woods is getting full of incubators and brooders. It shows the poultry industry is thriving. It beats all how many incubators are "the best ever," etc. There are some men who blame the makers of incubators for mistakes they make themselves. The man who makes a failure because he has ideas of his own about running an incubator that conflict with the directions given by the maker will hatch out more trouble than chicks. Sometimes it is quite dangerous to know too much about things you are not acquainted with.

Because Mr. Denny does considerable yellow judging is no sign his work is that way. His work in the Buff alleys this winter has been excellent and shows what a careful specialist judge can do.

Mr. Schwab has been behind the bars a good deal this winter, but they were bars with feathers on. He also is making an excellent record in the show ring. Careful conscientious judging soon brings its reward, and that reward is a reputation.

Love of occupation is half the battle won in any calling. Half hearted interest always is needing some lubricator that it never gets. Dollar and cent idea predominating in poultry raising is a constant brake applied on the wheels of success. Humane ideas come only where love in some form exists. Conditions that govern success in poultry raising are mainly prompted by kindness of heart that is sure to promote the comfort of the flock.

Little Rhode Island is certainly spreading herself in a fowl manner. She is Rhode Island Redding the country; has Narraganset turkeyed the U. S. and now comes out with white birds. Well, the surplus has got to get somewhere, or the State must annex more territory.

All poultry diseases have indications or symptoms, which, if observed early, may prevent serious loss. Close observation of a flock may save the owner dollars and lots of trouble.

Professor Samuel Cushman in the Country Gentleman says: "It is useless to attempt to raise geese successfully if they are afraid of the attendant. They should be treated with kindness and have full confidence in their keeper. A nervous, quick tempered, excitable, rough person may keep them so disturbed that they cannot thrive."

There might be more talks on poultry at the farmers institutes in some states. In sections where poor or rough lands are, it would seem poultry talks would be of benefit, and might induce some one to try poultry keeping on business principles. The trouble is that many of these institutes do not appear to know the importance of the poultry industry.

A floater paragraph is going the rounds of the daily press about a twenty year old hen that recently died. The hen is said to have laid in her career 4,750 eggs, an average of over 237 per year. It is, indeed, a most remarkable lie—I mean hen. A hen that can, or would average that many eggs every year for twenty years, deserved more consideration than she evidently received. The person who so thoughtfully kept the twenty years record so correctly must have had a trap nest brain. Is Ananias on earth again? If not this fowl story man discounts him, and all fishermen must be green with envy. Get a Carnegie medal ready, please.

Frequent changes of food is an appetite sharpener, and stimulates digestion. Variety of foods is health promoting with fowls as much as with humans, and for the same reasons. It is variety that makes the balanced ration and provides the varied requirements that is called for in egg production and fattening of fowls, or the growing of chicks.

How about the brood coops, brooders, runs, etc., for young chicks? Are they in good condition—ready for the chicks when they are hatched? Better look them over and attend to all needed repairs ahead of time when they will be needed.

Get your "ad" in the paper ahead of the egg season. Test the eggs for fertility before you commence sending any to purchasers. Don't go back on your good resolutions made early in the year. Don't get lazy because the mercury is going down. When cold weather prevails it is the very time to do good work in the poultry yard. Don't neglect the hens because it is cold.

ODD STATEMENTS

We noticed a short time ago in one of our exchanges an article from the pen of an enthusiast in poultry culture, who stated that oyster shell was one of the best kinds of food to induce a large egg yield during the winter. This same article stated that oyster shell would produce eggs, take the place of grit and increase the fertility in the egg supply from the hens that were fed this in their ration.

We have noticed in hundreds of instances in agricultural papers and in some of the most expensive illustrated publications of the country statements regarding poultry and the care of same that, to say the least, are most ridiculous. Not long ago in one of the most credited monthly magagines appeared the statement that ten pairs of mated Homers would produce one hundred and twenty pairs of squabs in a year, with but very little attention. In another paper it was stated that incubators would hatch a larger per cent of the eggs than hens; and in the same article was the remarkable statement that the incubator and brooder would run themselves.

Why periodicals claiming to be teachers of the highest character accept and publish apparent impossibilities relative to poultry, squabs and duck culture, we can not understand. Anything whatever seems to go along these lines in many publications. Hundreds of people are thus misled. One of the saddest cases we can call to mind is of a thrifty schoolteacher, who had accumulated a little money, and was induced to venture all she had in one of these branches, only to be disappointed in the outcome. She neither had the strength, the willingness nor the experience for the undertaking. She had read that all she need to do was to invest her money and wait for the returns. Unfortunately, she is still waiting up to the present time.

There is no outdoor business proposition that will equal the poultry business in all its branches for profit, where it is properly understood and in the hands of experienced persons. For these reasons, we always advocate the "go slow" principles. From small beginnings come great results. The often quoted phrase, "great trees from little acorns grow" best describes the poultry business. Those who begin with a pen or trio of fowls, ducks, turkeys or geese, and gradually increase their holdings as they gain experience and ability to handle them are the successful ones. Hundreds who have started in a small way with water fowls and squabs have grown to large producers. Hundreds who have started overpoweringly large at first are the ones that have been disappointed. Make haste slowly, walk before you run, are the best plans to follow in all branches of the poultry business.

Never be misled by statements that oyster shells will increase the egg production. Nothing on earth will increase the egg production, but care and feeding of that kind of material which furnishes the component part of the egg. Surely no hen can make eggs from oyster shells. Oyster shell and limestone grit helps to form the shell of the egg and to grind the food in the crop. Other than this they are of no value in the production of eggs, but they do help to maintain the bone, muscle and tissues of the body.

Incubators and brooders can not run themselves. Nothing on earth can bring into life from the shell of an egg more chicks than the hen. The advantages of the incubator and brooder is that they are always ready for use when needed, their cleanliness and possibilities along the line of production at will, and the care of same in the brooder without the trouble of the hens. One must learn to use them the same as a piano or a sewing machine. They need attention, but can be readily handled and cared for by any one over ten or twelve years old who will give the necessary application to it.

Pigeons as squab breeders will not produce twelve pairs a year. They do produce on the average from six to seven pairs per year, and it takes proper care, attention and experience to produce the squabs of a quality that will bring profitable returns in the market. As stated before there is good profit in the business, but it must be worked at the same as any other business.

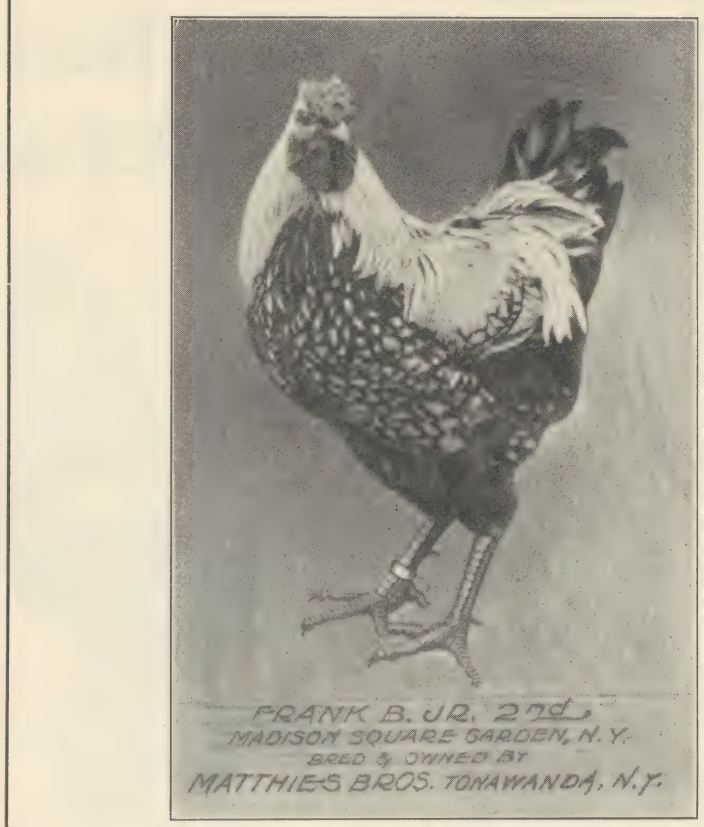
THE CARE OF SETTING HENS

No period in the existence of the hen we presume is so trying upon her life and constitution than the broody period during the very hot weather. It is natural for the hen to become broody at different seasons of the year. During the early spring people are very anxious to obtain the services of the setting hen. They are cared for, placed in comfortable convenient places, dusted for the destruction of vermin, and every possible attention given them to obtain a successful hatch from the eggs placed under them.

Later in the season, and under certain conditions the broody hens become a nuisance. In writing of this condition, one of the correspondents to the Florida Agriculturist states as follows:

"I learned something a few weeks ago, in the poultry line, which I do not remember to have seen in your paper, that has been of inestimable benefit to me, so I 'pass it along.'

"My entire flock of hens was seized with a burning desire to sit this spring six or eight at a time. I did not wish to set any hens and undertook to break them up. I tried every remedy I ever heard of, but to no purpose. Moving the nests, ducking, dungeons, starvation, and over-feeding were tried in turn with no effect. Some hens sat from four to six weeks. After this the following plan was given me by a neighbor and worked like a charm:



"Take a wooden box, cracker box is good, tack wire screen securely on the bottom, having knocked out the wooden one. Nail 2 broad slats on top. Put in two tin cans, one for water, one for food, nailed up from the floor. Three ordinary size hens can be put in this, nailing down one end of slats half way, that the nails may be readily removed. The box must be set up a few feet above the ground that the wind and air may pass freely underneath. Set in the shade where there is as much breeze as possible, as the chief virtue is in the wood. A hen will not set if she can not keep her feet warm. I broke up the most obstinate hens in two days."

This brings to mind a statement recently clipped from the "Farmer's Guide" with reference to the handling of the broody hen, and feeling assured that our readers will be pleased with the different plans of handling, we publish the following:

"At this season there are more brood hens than even those who have no incubators care to set; and when several hens hatch at once the chicks are all given to one or more hens and the others must be 'broken up' before they will begin to lay again. From the different methods given in farm papers there seems to be many ways of doing this.

"When a child, I remember seeing some of my grandmother's hens running about with a piece of red flannel sewed fast to the long feathers of the tail. The hens, it seems, would become frightened at this object always in pursuit and running about to escape it, would forget the nest, when the flannel would be removed. One old lady I knew would shut her setters in a coop and leave them a week without food. By that time they would be so hungry they would 'get busy' hunting something to eat as soon as released and seldom resume their old nests. I confess to being too 'chicken-hearted' to try this plan. Not long ago I read where some one recommended pouring water in a keg to a depth of a few inches and shutting a setter in this. This is heroic treatment, and would surely prove a 'dampener' to the most ambitious hen. Some recommended a coop suspended by a wire as an effectual way of changing the hen's mind about her desire to sit. I like to have a coop made of slats and large enough to accommodate several hens at once. I feed and water them often, or keep food and water before them the greater part of the time. Sometimes I mix some good condition powder with their food and before many days they may be turned out and soon begin laying again.—"Mrs. L. J. M."

Again we wish to impress upon the mind of our readers the absolute necessity of providing a grass-covered enclosure in which to place the broody hens that are not used for hatching eggs. Nothing is so important or so necessary about a poultry plant as a small, grass-covered, well-shaded enclosure in which your broody hens may be dropped. It is not necessary to have any house, coop or pen within this enclosure. Any time from the first of May to the end of October, broody hens may be placed within this enclosure with perfect safety without any shelter but the sky above them. If kept within this enclosure for a week or ten days, they will entirely recover from the desire to sit and be in condition to return to laying in much better health than when taken from the laying pens Such treatment is the easiest to accomplish the most humane results. Every one who uses such an enclosure for their hens will never regret having provided it for them, and will learn from its use that it is the most advantageous and healthy method of breaking up the setting hen.

SILVER LACED WYANDOTTES

Houdans

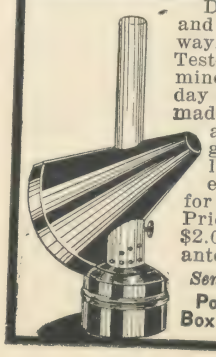
A criticism on Houdans in your Boston Show report, February number, would lead the uninitiated to believe the breed was dying out or was of no great value because the Houdan class was not better filled at this show.

As to the value and popularity of the breed this is not true, and while we never expect to see our favorites as plentiful as the Leghorn or Rocky still they are today as worthy a fowl as are bred, and many a fancier has passed them by only to take up their inferiors. The Houdan would be more popular if we had a club to promote their interests. One which would direct its energies to advertising the breed and not the breeder. Also the class at Boston this year would have been well filled if members of the present club had been notified that a club meeting was to be held at this show. I received three letters in relation to this, but being unable to answer referred them to the secretary, who was also in the dark about the matter.

The Houdan is steadily gaining in popularity. This was proven by our club exhibit at St. Louis, which was, in the opinion of every one present, the finest and largest collection of the breed ever grouped together and where all the breeders who courted competition came out in the open and showed their birds. We hope to see the next club exhibit again held at the Boston show, and if the members are notified in season, no doubt birds will be exhibited which will try the mettle of every breeder. By that time we will have our new standard, and breeders will understand which type of Houdans is the correct one. Now at least three varieties of the breed are sent to the show rooms.

We have bred these French beauties for fourteen years, and must say we are fonder of them today than ever: they are our money makers, and we will breed them to the end of the chapter.

As winter layers, in unheated coops, they have no equal. We tried four of the popular varieties before we settled on the Houdan but could do nothing with them when it came to obtaining winter eggs. The Houdan is a very thickly feathered fowl with no comb or wattle to freeze, and is healthy, hardy and very active. We can, and do, obtain eggs from them in winter, even such winters as the past two have been. From 614 laying pullets this past winter we have shipped to New York City a thirty-dozen crate of eggs each morning. We have our express receipts to verify the statement. Even in the very coldest spells we have not missed a shipment. These fowls have been kept in unheated coops, but not with curtain fronts. The fowl does not exist that can live in such a coop, much less lay with the thermometer 30 degrees below.



As a breed the Houdan is a roup immune, and in twelve years we have never had a case of roup in our yards. We believe roup is hereditary, and never allow a fowl to show more than the symptoms of a cold before we doctor and cure it at once by an exclusive diet of onions and charcoal. Our Houdan is the original Pinckney strain, and is bred as close to the lines laid down by that grand fancier and friend as possible. And not a drop of creve blood flows in their veins. They have small V combs, and are low and long bodied, with broad shoulders, deep breasts, and with huge crests and beards.

Our breeding hens must weigh seven pounds or they do not get in our pens, and the male bird eight pounds, or he does not head the pen. We never use a cockerel or pullet as a breeder, but keep a trap nest record of our best pullets each year, and use the highest record birds as breeders the next season. We have bred for the 200 egg hen for eight years, and now never use a hen that did not make a pullet year egg record of 200 eggs or over. The first Schenectady hen this year had a pullet year egg record of 243 eggs, and I have fourteen pullets from her that even excel her record.

The average Houdan eggs are twice the size of egg laid by many of the popular varieties. In fact they excel every breed in this respect with the possible exception of the Minorca. We find the chicks very hardy, and seldom ever lose one from sickness. Moreover, the pullets will weigh six pounds and be laying when six months old.

The Houdan is distinctly a utility fowl, and we would not continue breeding them is such were not the case. Combined with this, we love their beauty. Those nodding bonnets and dainty graceful ways gladden our eyes as their utility qualities fatten our purse. Houdan fanciers have today the grandest combination fowl in existence, but God in his infinite wisdom did not give to them human speech with which to tell their good qualities. Will not their friends do so? —E. F. McAvoy.

A Remedy for Lice

Sometimes mites, with the utmost cleanliness in the chicken yard, are kept constantly there by birds. Sparrows, swallows, wrens, I have found their nests and young literally alive with chicken mites. They will cause trouble every time if left to build their nests and hatch their young in close proximity to the chickens.

I am a great advocate of plenty of hot water around the chicken house and yard. It is a good idea to throw in on the dusting grounds also, and one of the best remedies outside of this against lice is an emulsion made of soft water, soap of any kind, although lye soap is the best, and kerosene. Dissolve, say, one half pound of soap—although more soap makes a better emulsion—in one gallon of soft water. Bring to a boil and then stir in with it two gallons of kerosene. This is about the proportion for the emulsion and can be put by for any future time. When you get ready to use it as a spray or wash, dilute it something in this proportion: For one-half gallon of the emulsion and from three to four gallons of water go over the roosts and walls with a broom and sprayer—a sprayer, though it be but a cheap one, is really necessary around chicken yards, as it sends the emulsion or hot water when you make use of it, into crack and crevice. And now, if one uses the emulsion with determination to get rid of mites, he will surely reduce them altogether or keep them down to a point that can do no harm to the chickens.—Farmer's Advocate.

American White Wyandotte Club

The annual meeting of the American White Wyandotte Club was held in the Mechanics Fair Building during the Boston Show. The club offered $50.00 in prizes to be competed for at the Boston Show, and also gave handsome club badges to winners of the same, and offered the same style badges to the Hartford, Conn. and Newark, N. J., shows. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Horace Havemeyer, Stamford, Conn., president; W. Barry Owen, Vineyard Haven, Mass., vice-president; W. R. Graves, Springfield, Mass., secretary and treasurer.

The membership fee to this club is $5.00, which, no doubt, is the reason for the club not having a large membership; but, as it is composed of breeders that are particularly interested in their breed, the good this club can do is considerable if carried out in the right direction.

The sentiment of the meeting was that we should work to better the condition of our exhibits at the important shows in the east. The place for the next meeting will be decided by vote of the executive committee.—W. R. Graves, secretary.

Buff Leghorn Club Meeting

The annual meeting of this club was held at Madison Square, New York City, Jan. 4, '06. The meeting was called to order by President Thomas Peer, and W. F. Brace was elected secretary pro tem. The report of Secretary and Treasurer Barnes was read and adopted, showing the club to be in good standing.

Many matters pertaining to the welfare of those egg machines, the Buff Leghorns, were discussed. It was decided that the secretary should go ahead and get the next catalogue out by the last of March. All breeders of this good, valuable breed are requested to send their $1.00 for membership at once, and get their name in the next book, which will be mailed free to any person asking for the same. The following officers were elected:

President, Thos. Peer, Fairfield, N. J.; Eastern vice-president, F. G. Wyckoff, Ithaca, N. Y.; Middle vice-president, W. M. Bean, Anoka, Minn.; Western vice-president, Fred H. Monroe, Denver, Col. Secretary and treasurer, George S. Barnes, Battle Creek, Mich.

Winsted's Show a Success

The members of the Western Connecticut Poultry Association of Winsted held their annual meeting at the town hall Wednesday evening, January 10th. The attendance was large, and much enthusiasm was manifested in the proceedings. Reports were presented and officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows:

President, G. L. Foskett; treasurer, F. D. Hallett; secretary, L. C. Capewell. Winsted's next score card exhibit will be held December 11, 12, 13, 14, 1900, one week earlier than last year.

Chickens Above the Timber Line

F. J. Francis of Tolland, Col., claims to have made the discovery that chickens hatched above the timber line are much sweeter and tenderer than those hatched below it, and have nothing but white meat. He has a chicken yard on the Moffatt railroad at Rawlins Pass, 11,660 feet above the sea, where there is no timber or vegetation of any kind except a few scattering bunches of cactus and sage brush. Every one of the chickens he has hatched has had white meat upon its legs as well as upon the breast, he says. Chickens will not live in a much higher altitude. They cannot breathe if they are taken from a low altitude into the mountains. If a chicken hatched in Kansas is taken immediately to Leadville or any other of the high places in Colorado the poor thing will gasp its soul away in a most distressing manner in a few days; but those hatched in high altitudes are as chipper and healthy in the rarefied air as the birds of the evergreen forests. Mr. Francis is the only man I know of who is raising chickens above the timber line. He is sending his "springers" to the Denver markets.—

Profits in Squabs and Water Fowl

It is to be remarked that the agricultural papers are drifting toward growing squabs, ducks and geese. This is an evidence of the increased demand for same and the knowledge of the possible chance to improve lands and increase profits upon the farms. Every person who is so situated that they can do so, should raise a few ducks, geese, poultry and squabs. They all add to the pleasures of life, they are profitable as food producers, and sell readily if nicely dressed for market during the winter months at profitable prices.

Testimonial

"Please renew my year's contract for one year of my classified one inch ad in the American Fancier. Your paper has brought me a large amount of good orders. From my ad in the American Fancier I sold last month seventy-five Pekin ducks, two mated pens Barred Plymouth Rocks, and 1,300 egg orders for Rocks. These orders came from Fairfield Poultry Farm, Fairfield, Conn. Long live the American Fancier with its ads!" —H. F. Sherwood.

Curing the Birds

Mr. Hugo Freese of Rochester, N. Y., who is himself a practical poultryman, has a sure roup cure which is at once effective and simple in its application. All that is necessary is to put the directed amount of his preparation in the drinking water, and every time the birds take a drink they take their own medicine along with it, and a speedy cure follows. Mr. Freese also manufactures an egg producer for making hens more prolific layers. Elsewhere in this paper he has an advertisement of these articles. Mr. Freese is quite well known as a fancier, his speciality being Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds.

Parties desiring eggs from these choice fowls or further information concerning his remedies should address Mr. Hugo Freese, Rochester, N. Y.

Grit That Turns Into Eggs is the kind that doesn't lose its sharp edges, that grinds up the horny portion of a hen's food and prepares it perfectly for digestion and assimilation.

Mico Spar Cubical Grit

makes hens hardy, sturdy, healthy, happy. They're bright-eyed; lay a big proportion of good-sized eggs, and their droppings show that their food is well-digested. There's profit in supplying Mico-Spar Cubical Grit and none is lost in the litter—it's always seen on account of its shining surface. Sold by dealers. Costs a cent a pound in hundred pound bags. Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

MODEL INCUBATORS and BROODERS

are the only Incubators and Brooders made by me. They embody all my latest improvements, and are made under my direct supervision. Do not become confused in the name and accept a weak imitation. It is no one part that makes a successful hatcher, but a nice balance needs to be secured in the heating, regulation and ventilation to produce the successful and profitable results.

MY NEW BOOK

"Eggs, Broilers and Roasters"

An Easy Lesson in Practical Poultry Culture. A Book of Value to all Poultrymen.

It gives the prices paid for eggs and poultry week by week for the past three years. It describes the profitable combinations of egg, broiler and roaster farms. It tells how and when a hatch taken off each week in the year could be most profitably marketed. It shows how you can make $2.00 on a large winter roaster. It tells what profits can be made with each of the popular breeds, and the costs of production. It shows what can be done with A Leghorn Egg Farm, A Leghorn Egg and Broiler Farm, A Wyandotte Egg Farm, A Wyandotte Egg and Broiler Farm, A Plymouth Rock Egg Farm, A Plymouth Rock Egg and Roaster Farm; Twelve months with Broilers; Twelve months with Roasters. This valuable work mailed FREE upon request. My model Incubators are used on the money-making farms. Model methods are money-making methods. I have helped thousands to make money with poultry. It is my business to teach those who use my Incubators and Brooders to do so profitably. Whether your needs are small or large, I shall be glad to advise with you.

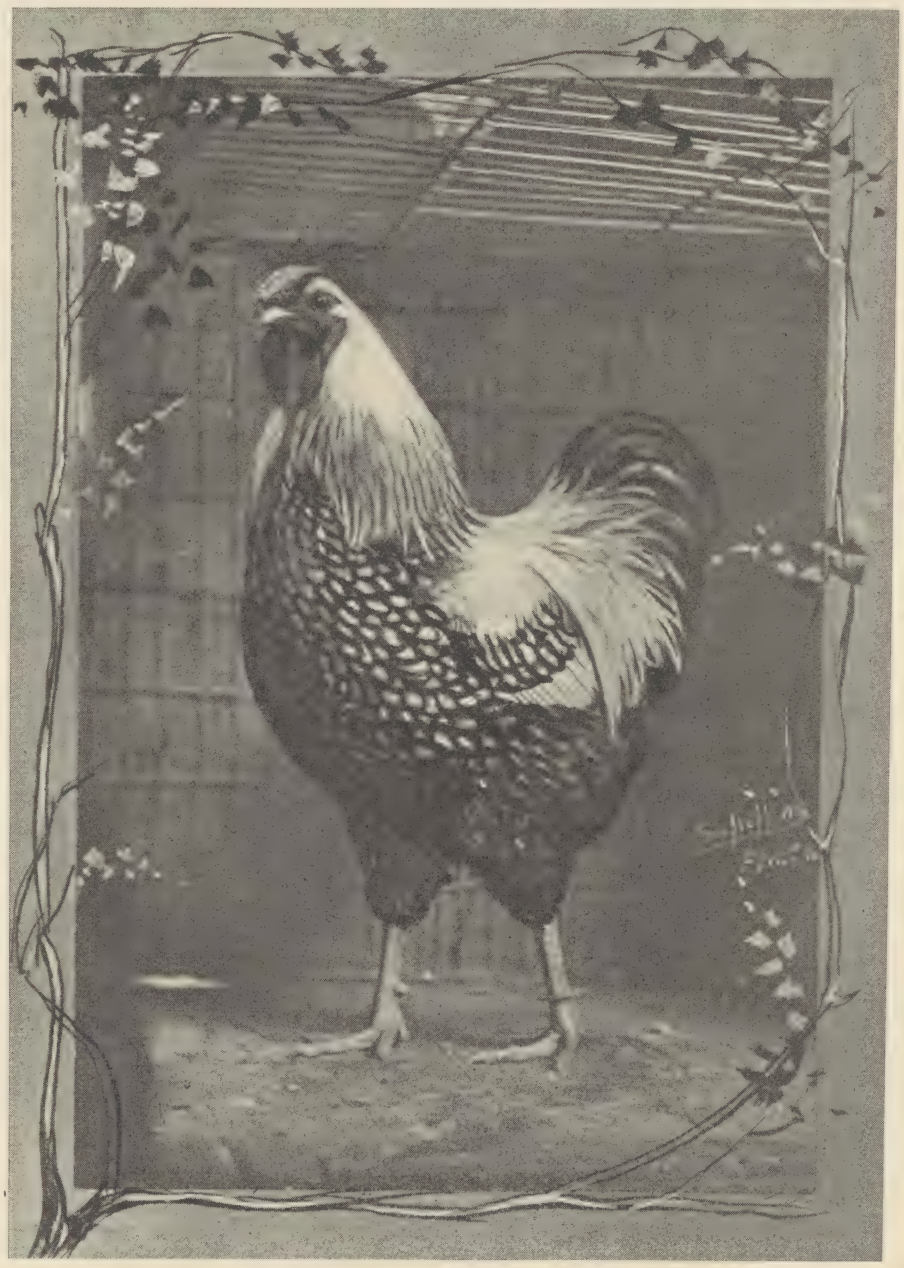
SILVER WYANDOTTES

BY THE EDITOR



The "American Beauties" of fowldom are the Silver Wyandottes. Well bred, they are the handsomest of all American varieties of poultry. This is conceded by all fair-minded lovers of the fowl beautiful. But it takes skill and patience to produce high class specimens. That is why Silver Wyandottes are not a "good thing" for the commercial dealer in chickens to fool his patrons with. It is true, some of the old crowd way back in the eighties, notably a Mr. Preston, at Binghamton, N. Y., made hay while the sun shone, and with a lavish expenditure of printer's ink, boomed style. The latter "public like to be humbugged" method made coin for the unscrupolous gang for a short time, and at the same time came near killing the breed. Everything that had laced feathers was sold as a Silver Wyandotte, and some had clean shanks, while others had feathers. Some had rose-combs, and not infrequently, we found some with single combs.

But they all went at good prices to disappont the "dear public" to such an extent that they fell by the wayside, and most of the shady boomers followed suit.

That was twenty years ago. But there were good men and true that never wavered in their faith, and stuck to the Silvers as a fly sticks to molasses drip. They knew the value and beauty of the breed was bound to win out, and they were right. Today, the Silvers are well established in both America and England.

English fanciers started in 1884 with birds that were anything but reliable as breeders, but it did not take them long to get birds of such quality as to command the admiration of American fanciers, which resulted in the importation of the open-laced English [illegible] of females to help along the rather dark and narrow-laced American type. The men that were enthusiastic in the olden days are, barring a few who have crossed the great divide, alive to-day, and just as sincere and earnest in their endeavors to put the Silvers as the head of all American varieties as ever. The Houdlettes, Sainsons, Jodreys, Becketts, Aldens, Coles, Millspaughs, and others of the old guard have been re-inforced by many new breeders East and West, and we may be pardoned as an old Silver Wyandotte breeder and fancier when we state that a more loyal and sincere lot of fanciers does not exist than the champions of the Silver Wyandotte. Having met nearly all of them, and passed judgment on their birds, it is only with unalloyed pleasure we look back upon the annual [illegible]tings and shows.

The illustration we give on this page is that of the Silver Wyandotte cockerel heading the third pen at Madison Square Garden last January. He was such an excellent type of the true American bred Silver Wyandotte that we asked Mr. Schilling to take a photograph and make a plate of the bird. The result is very gratifying and satisfactory, especially the style and shape, the fine curved lines denoting grace, being well brought out in the picture. He is a Wyandotte all over, showing the symmetry of the hocks instead of losing the same in a mass offeathers that some modern chunks of beef called Wyandottes are sadly burdened with. This bird was bred by Dr. A. T. Beckett, of Salem, New Jersey, and contains several lines of blood that were famous fifteen years ago when the old Philadelphia Show was in its glory and Silver Wyandottes filled many coops. Blood will tell some time, and it is only from line bred birds that we can expect the highest results. Space forbids going in to the history of Silver Wyandottes—all that can be found in the different books dev ted to the breeds—but we will add, that as layers of nice, brown eggs, provided the hens are carefully selected, and as broilers and roasters for the American market, the Silver Wyandotte is one of the finest varieties of fowl ever produced.

SILVER WYANDOTTE COCKEREL. Bred and Owned by Dr. A. T. Beckett.

MINORCAS ALL RIGHT.

Editor American Fancier:

I was much pleased that Mr. George Northrup, the "Daddy of all good Minorca Breders," had seen fit to answer Mr. Gamewell's article on Minorcas. I was also surprised to see that there was another breeder of Minorcas (who had an article in last week's Fancier) who thought as Mr. Gamewell did.

A man must certainly have been asleep, as Mr. Northrup put it, who would prefer the Minorca of twenty years ago to the Minorca of to-day. I was breeding Minorcas twenty years ago, and if Ihad some of the old-fashioned kind to-day, with their short legs and short bodies, high tails and dull-colored plumage, I would willingly sell them to either Mr. Gamewell or Mr. Maunder at fifty cents each, and hasten to buy some of the beautiful birds that the New Standard calls for, with their large, long bodies, compact plumage, with its beautiful, metalic sheen, high-caried heads rand wonderful layers of large white eggs in both winter and summer.

I have been breeding Rocks for the last four years, and have seen far more difference in the color of Rock eggs than Minorca eggs, as I have frequently had well-bred Rocks lay eggs nearly white. There is only one breed of fowl that I know of on the list that would improve the Minorca, and that is the Langshan. What a beautiful back it would give tmem?

It would take nearly half a century to breed back to the right length of back. I have purchased eggs and birds from the best Minorca breeders on the continent, and never yet had a bird with feathers on its legs. I have been thinking lately that the Minorca breders are a very modest lot, as we seldom see an article on the good qualities of the Black Minorca, in any of the Poultry Journals.

It would be far better not to write at all, than to write as Mr. Gamewell and Mr. Maunder have, as I certainly consider that they have slandered the breders and have done a lot of injury to the breed. I consider the Minorca the best breed on top of the earth. No breed lays more eggs, and none as large, and they are also a first-class table fowl, their meat being extra juicy and of fine flavor, at the same time not having that coarse texture that some breeds have.

My advice to Mr. Gamewell and Mr. Maunder is, to wake up, get abreast of the times, stop looking backwards, and get some of those fine, large Minorchas the New Standard calls for.

T. A. FAULDS.

London, Ont., Can., Aug. 25, 1906.

Wet the White Wash Habit. It's a cheap fad, but so effective.

Home-made sprays are said to be as good as regular standard articles. It may be so, but we are sorry for the times we tried it.

Not yet too late for capons. It has been suggested it is better business policy to dispose of those slightly off cockerels that way than to get a reputation for selling poor stock. The price will be about the same.

The best use for Labor Day we know is to take a saw, hammer, box of nails and go over the poultry houses, closing all the cracks opened up by the summer sun and storms. It is not much too, soon, either.

Better get your houses for the pullets in shape to use. Those September days are all right, but the nights are all wrong. Roosting in trees does well enough for August, but not for September. By the time they are taught to go to the new home, it will be time they were under cover.

After all we see in the Poultry Press, one would think it superfluous to mention that the pullets and young cockerels should have separate yards. But, have yours?

And then you have always heard not to mix the pullets and hens. A pullet would starve to death on what a hen would get too fat to lay, even if the pullet got her fair share. Therefore, if you want winter eggs, separate them and feed both intelligently.

Coop up poultry at least 12 hours—24 would be better—before killing, and furnish plenty of drinking water. You get better meat and there is less danger of spoiling when the system is absolutely free of undigested food.

After careful investigation and extended research, we have found that lice and mites do not take summer or any other kind of vacations. We have found their capacity for good work far smaller than their insignificant size, and for evil and destruction enormously out of proportion to their longitudal and latitudinal dimensions.

Don't forget the Fattening Coop.

Don't forget the green food a little later when the grass is dried up.

Don't handle your birds roughly while they are in moult. Bruised feathers are frequently white. This fact all the stronger shows the need for separating the males from the females.

If you don't mind the injunction about crowding the chicks at night, be doubly careful now. Sweaty chickens are very susceptible to colds. September colds are an excellent foundation for December roup. Many good breeders divide their flocks into small bunches of ten to fifteen in the roosting quarters. Even allowing the old stock to crowd on the roosts affects the brilliancy of the plumage.

Save all the leaves this fall. They make excellent scratching material. The main objection to them is that they break up into a fine dust. But try the trash on your asparagus bed. Use a little gypsum to hold the moisture of the winter rains and snows and then revel in asparagus 1 inch or more in diameter next spring. You won't have so many weeds to bother about, either.

It is a good time to plow in your poultry runs. Take the fowls out of a few for several weeks, plant rape seed, or rye if you prefer. You'll be surprised some of the winter days how green it will be on the warmer days. It will furnish variety for the hens, help the vitality and the egg yield, too. Of course you know you ought to do that, but do it. It is not nearly so much trouble when you are at it as it seems in contemplation.

Make at least one Fall Show. It will help you in two ways. You will have to take a little extra pains to get your old stock in condition and the young stock up in size. That experience will be worth something. Then the farmers' wives will go to county fairs. They are the ones to make customers of. They are the key to the question of getting Buff Rocks on every farm in this country.—Buff Rock Quarterly.

Objects to Northrup's Criticisms.

Editor American Fancier:

Having been a reader of the American Fancier for some time, and being more or less an admirer of the Black Minorca, was much interested in the article—"The Future of the Black Minorca"—written by Mr. J. A. Gamewell, and published in your issue of July 7, in which he invited a full and free discussion as to the merits of the past, present, and future breeding of this grand bird.

A full and impartial discussion of this subject will surely conserve the best interests of all concerned in bringing out the merits or demerits of the past and present methods of breeding, and it seems to me that all Black Minorca breeders will be only too glad of the opportunity of thus gaining the news of those best qualified by years of study and experience to put them right in any matters in which they may be in doubt.

Having all this in mind, I was more than surprised on reading the contribtuion of Mr. Geo. H. Northrup, to find that, instead of replying to Mr. Gamewell's article in the spirit it was evident he meant to invite, he (Mr. Northrup) takes the opportunity—not of giving his views on the proper methods of advancing the breed to a higher state of perfection—so much as to take the opportunity of venting his personal spite and animus on one who semed to have only the best interests of the Black Minorca at heart.

Mr. Northrup's article was nothing, if not vituberative, and as such must be deplored by all lovers of fair play, and by all members of the Black Minorca Club, who, I am sure, must feel mortified that their President, over his own signature, would stoop to take such an occasion to vent his personal spite against a fellow member, whom, it seems to me, has only the best interests of the Black Minorca in sight, and in vited the discussion for the sole reason for bringing the Black Minorca to a higher state of perfection.

I can find nothing personal in Mr. Gamewell's article, which makes it all the more surprising that Mr. Northrup instead of accepting the issue with that fairness which is due from one man to his neighbor, should subordinate his interests in the discussion opened up, by taking advantage of the courtesy of The American Fancier, in asking them to publish a strictly private and personal attack.

Why not enter into the discussion in all fairness? For this a subject of too much importance to be side-tracked in its inception by matters wholly irrevelant to the questions at issue, and, if we can help one another with any suggestions along the lines of pure breeding and better breeding, with consequent advantages in utility, etc., we should be only too glad to place them at one another's disposal, thereby benefitting not only the future of the birds, but ourselves as well.

In any future articles, I hope the contributors will confine themselves to the merits of the birds, thereby accomplishing the primary purpose of the discussion—the Future of the Black Minorca—thus adding to our knowledge of what concerns us very nearly, and, in gaining the respect and confidence of the public at large.

GEORGE A. MIDDLETON.

ROCKVILLE, MD., SHOW.

Rockville opens the poultry show campaign with a record breaker at the Montgomery County Fair last week. The carload circuit representatives were out in force. S. G. Hoake and son, Mrs. W. Minich and Mr. J. H. Mehring met in a royal battle for the sweepstakes. The winners of the Silver Cup prizes were: Mediterranean, S. G. Hoake & Son; Plymouth Rocks, Mrs. R. P. Hines; Wyandottes, Calvin Hicks; Asiatics, James Franciscans. The Brown Leghorn Class was simply excellent. The winning hens and pullets were ideal specimens. Miss Pitchlynn, of Washington, won the majority of awards. It was not only a pleasure to note the average excellence of her birds, but a delight to see specimens of the Leghorn so tame. No one can truly say the most nervous energetic breed, Leghorns, cannot become tame and submissive under the care of a true fancier—at least a woman fancier. A scary Leghorn never shows to advantage, but when a good specimen comes up with its characteristic springy step, it does any one good to look at it. There were many other unusually good, strong classes for such an early fall show. Most of the old birds were in comparatively good condition. Perhaps later on some of the competing specimens may change places, when more fully feathered, if they compete together again. Bantams were out in a 500 batallion, about all breeds represented. The son of Mr. Samuel Steinmetz, of Washington, Morgan Steinmetz, was on hand with some fine Bantams. Like his father, he is an earnest enthusiast who looks after quality, and he won a good share of the honors in competition with some old timers too. Not only was the poultry house filled full three tiers high, but the old dining hall was also utilized, and then a number of coops had to be placed outside. It is said another year the household department building will be turned over to poultry department. The judges were Mr. E. A. Warner, and G. O. Brown. Mr. Calvin Hicks is the Superintendent, and he is a hustler, and well liked by all poultrymen.

THE ROCHESTER SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

In your issue of August 18th, an article appeared, stating, that the "Great Rochester Show" would be held Jan. 14 to 19, 1907. This needs correction, as the dates are January 22 to 26. This show, which will be the greatest in the hstory of Rochester, will not be held by the Flower City Poultry Association, but by the Genesee Valley Poultry and Pigeon Association, an organization which has ben formed recently by progressive fanciers of Rochester and vicinity, and which bids fair to become one of the largest organizations of its kind. The Flower City is going out of existence, and its members have joined the new Association almost in a body. The Superintendent of the coming show is Mr. C. W. Augenstein, a gentleman who is well known and highly respected amongst the fanciers of New York and neighboring States. The knowledge that the management of the show will rest in his competent hands will be ample assurance, not only to all exhibitors, but to every fancier, that every detail will receive thorough attention.

The officers of the Genesee Valley Poultry and Pigeon Association are as follows: President, C. D. Burrell; Vice-President, A. Maybank; Treasurer, J. Drechsler; Secretary, F. A. Newman; Recording Secretary, E. W. Weeks.

The Board of Directors includes, besides the above named officers, the following gentlemen: H. Freese, A. Fritsch, B. Schilling, R. H. Pringle, H. A. Irrig, F. J. Trimmal.

F. A. NEWMAN, Secretary.

The Inter-State Fair, Trenton, N. J.

The premium list of the Inter-State Fair held at Trenton, N. J., September 24-28, is out, and the Pigeon varieties have indeed fared well. They offer a most extended classification, the best of judges, and most liberal prize money, $2.00 first, and $1.00 second, entry fee, 50 cents.

We trust the Pigeon fanciers will give this Association their support. The show will be caged by Spratt's Patent, which insures the best of care, feed and service.

Entries close September 8th, with T. Farrer Rackham, Secretary, 450 Market Street, Newark, N. J.

G. P. Pilling & Son, Philadelphia, Pa.

The sheep industry and poultry raising on hillside farming would make a good combination in the East, a fence that would confine a hen would turn a dog.

One outlay in fencing would answer for both, an important item in strating such an enterprize.

The prices received for both products are alluring.

After all the best market is in selling to the man who expects to consume his purchase what is called private trade.

Those engaged in it are not going around with a brass band either, for they know a good thing when they see it.

Recently I saw a battered up individual with an oily tongue and persuasive manner, pocket at least forty cents more on a single chicken than the middleman could have paid him, a few customers each week would pay for his chicken feed.

That apple receipt as green food is great if you have the apples, never had a flock of chickens fatten so rapidly in all my experience, caught about two dozen young cockerels which were getting troublesome about the brooder house, although very thin in flesh when shut in, ten days has put them in excellent market condition, and the only extra attention they have received has been a feed of apples at noon.

The morning and evening feeds has been the same as dealt out to the general flock.

Stock being fitted for our fair this week has given me less trouble than formerly. Those who show on an extended circuit cannot supply the necessary green food in a better way or with less trouble.

Chicken thieves about here are making the flocks small and their owners sad.

As I said before it is really wonderful that any chicks reach maturity.

It is rather inconvenient to resettle a colony doing nicely in some snug corner, but one can hardly be expected to sleep constantly with one ear open to hear the squawk of a chicken.

The colony house is generally cooler than the big house, but as between sweltering and boiling, the former is the more profitable to the pocket of the owner.

Once under lock and key, the contract of the party of the first part is fulfilled, what the party of the second part will do is only a conjecture.

I have just gathered in some two hundred which I had considered fixed until late fall, they had as fine a run as could be provided for them and could choose any roosting place they liked best, this they must exchange for close confinement in a stifling atmosphere.

The editors kindly remarks about dogs has read with great appreciation by me just before I went out to catch the chickens.

One farmer whose fowls are taken every fall says dogs are no good if you don't keep a dog they take them, and if you do they take them just the same, he says a dog will eat the seat out of your best friend's pants, and run and hide under the bed when a real thief comes around.

The stock of the one breed fancier makes a much better show than the many colored flocks of us general purveyors to the market.

As for me, I enjoy feeding and caring for a hen show every day, but I do think could the keepers of small home flocks be induced to rear one variety in its purity the appearance of the flocks as they pass in view while driving about the country would be more interesting to look at.

The millenium will come, however, before this happens.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 10,257 cases. The strong position of the market noted at the close of last week culminated yesterday in advances on the principal grades. The growing scarcity of fine eggs has created a very firm tone, and so far as extra firsts and first are concerned it is purely a seller's market. Collections in all parts of the country are falling off rapidly. In the current receipts the proportion of strictly fresh is so small that receivers find it difficult to candle out quantities of any size. There were no sales recorded under the call, although 21c was bid for firsts.

Trade at the opening was rather sluggish and prices eased off about 1c on all grades of eastern and western. Fancy western, large sizes, seldom exceeded 15c. Fowls ruled steady to firm under the influence of moderate supplies on the spot and prospective. Shippers are advised that old ducks and geese are selling to poor advantage on this market, and that shipments should be curtailed as far as possible. Small sizes of turkeys suitable for broiling are selling at full prices, but birds weighing 5@6 lbs are dragging at 25c.

AMATEUR CHICKEN RAISING.

I am a city man with a few country acres among the mountains devoted by our family to summer recreation, fruits and just enough general farming to require the employment of some indigenous brawn and muscle. Last spring we decided to add chickens to our live stock, consisting of a horse and cow, and so we invested in an incubator, two brooders and 600 eggs of the Buff Rock variety, delivered as occasion required, exactly 50 per cent. of which proved to contain the potentiality of chicken production. In about three months after the incubator lamp was first lighted we had 300 chickens to devour our substance, including grasshoppers, other products of the farm, and a substantial quantity of commercial chicekn feeds.

We have heard schoolma'ams and other city folk express the hope that some day they may raise chickens for profit and incidentally for amusement. If we may impress them with a sense of the constant watchfulness and care which this diversion requires, the purpose of this letter will be served.

We were utterly without experience, but our first attempt at least has been successful. We have raised 90 per cent. of our three hatches, and the chickens have sold at good prices as fast as they reached the broiler stage. The last hatch will not mature in time for the best summer market, but the farmers around have spoken for all the pullets we shall sell and the cockerels will go for what they will bring.

It was in our favor that we knew that ignorance and carelessness in the chicken business are doomed to failure every time. The young member of the family, who is the special guardian of the industry, assidiously studied all the chicken literature he could find before we bought the incubator. In book learning he might have passed examination at the Cornell poultry school before we heard a chicken peep.

We are very certain now that from the egg to the market constant vigilance is the price of broilers. Humidity and temperature in the incubator must be right. Ingenious applances in these hatching machines regulate such matters; but you can't fully trust a machine. You must see that it does its work all the time. Woe to the poulterer who forgets to turn the eggs twice a day! Chickens to be raised cheaply in large numbers are the product of the incubator an dthe brooding house; but these devices are merely stepmotherly and their chickens require special solicitude. There are sore eyes to be doctored, indigestion to be remedied, parasites to be forestalled, weaklings to be coddled, and an occasional runt that eats its weight every day and won't grow to be mercifully chloroformed. Then there are prowlers of the woods that prefer their chickens raw and must be taught to give a wide berth to the colony houses and chicken runs. These are only a few illustrations of the demands upon the time of our poulterer. We tell him that he works on the eight hour plan; eight hours before breakfast, eight hours before dinner, and eight hours before supper.

As near as we can tell now it has cost in cash about 10 cents, including an allowance for deterioration of the plant, to raise a broiler. It has been sold to chicken buyers at our gate, live weight, at an average price of 35 cents. Our plant will be doubled in capacity next season, and some economies, such as home production of incubator eggs, will diminish expenses a little, while the cost of caring for 600 rather than 300 chickens will not be proportionately increased. We have enjoyed the experience and are convinced that if anything will dispel all thoughts of sordid city cares it is chickens.

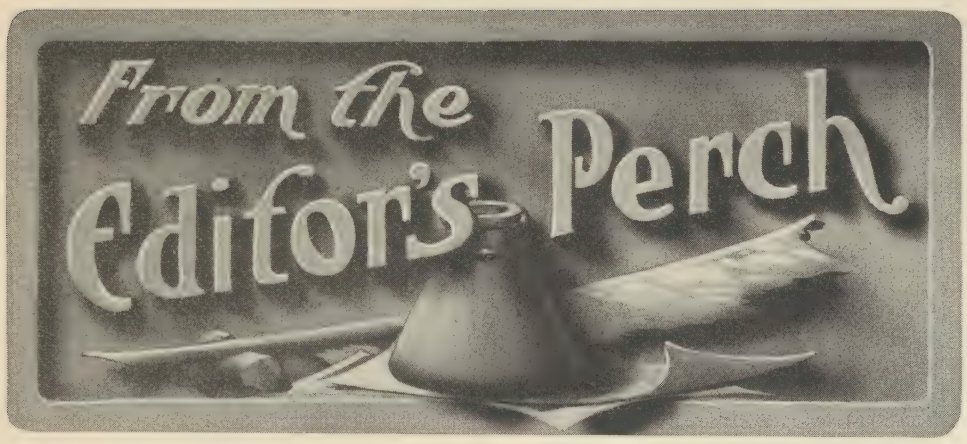
AMATEUR FARMER, in N. Y. Sun.

White Leghorns vs. Mongrels.

The following summary of one of the poultry experiments made last year at the West Virginia University Experiment Station, by J. H. Stewart and Horace Atwood, will prove interesting reading to admirers of the White Leghorn fowl:

1. Fifty White Leghorns were compared with fifty mongrels for one year as to cost of food and egg production, ardinary care and attention being given them such as they would receive on the average farm.

2. In addition to skim milk used to moisten the mash, the Leghorns consumed 61 pounds of food costing 85.3 cents, and the mongrels consumed 66.8 pounds of the same materials costing 92.1 cents.



3. During the year the Leghorns laid 116.5 eggs worth $2.24 per hen, and the mongrels 96.1 eggs worth $1.78 per hen.

4. The Leghorns gave a profit over the cost of food of $1.39 and the mongrels a profit of 86 cents.

5. The mongrels gained in weight one pound more per head than the Leghorns. If this increase in weight is taken into the consideration then the Leghorns gave a profit of 40 cents per hen more than the mongrels.

6. The highest prices for fresh eggs usually prevail during the months of November, December, January and February. During these four months the mongrels laid only 364 eggs and the Leghorns 1,029 or practically three times as many.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION—Send twenty-five cents and we will send The American Fancier for thirteen weeks to one address.

The illustration on our title page is made from a photograph by J. Albert Lewis of a La Fleche Cock in our yards. Mr. Lewis succeeded, after much trouble, in posing the bird so as to get what we consider an almost ideal profile of a La Fleche male. The photo was sent to Mr. Schilling for retouching, in order to make the plate satisfactory for the printer. The bird has not been faked, as some of our reformed brother editors may be inclined to call a retouched picture. He looks in the picture as he did in the yards the day he "was tuk." No doubt the roughness of the plumage could have been fixed up nicely, and an ideal illustaration made of the bird, but Artist Schilling and the writer of these notes are so afraid of being accused as picture fakirs that we let it go with only the slight indiscretion mentioned above.

The value of feeding skim milk to fowls for egg production was demonstrated in two experiments made last season at West Virginia Experimental Station. In both experiments more eggs were produced when skim milk was substituted for water in moistening the mash. Under the conditions prevailing in these experiments, and with eggs selling for twenty or twenty-five cents a dozen, the skim milk used for moistening the mash had a feeding value of from one-half to two cents a quart. In these trials 802 quarts of skim milk were fed, resulting in an increase in the egg production of 702 eggs. As skim milk is a waste product in many sections of the country, the importance of feeding it to the hens and chickens is obvious. We have seen some mighty fine Pekin Ducks raised on skim milk and bran ration. With a little corn meal added, it makes the cheapest, if not the best, duck fed we are acquainted with.

If the recommendations of the committee of fourteen are accepted by the American Poultry Association at the annual meeting of the latter at Auburn, N. Y., next January, the Secretary will have fifteen hundred dollars a year instead of six hundred and in addition will be allowed a stenographrapher with a five hundred and twenty dollars salary to assist him in his work. But there will be no more gallavanting around the country judging at poultry shows and dealing in birds as a side line, neither will his eloquent voice be heard at Farmers' and Poultrymen's Institutes in the future. He will have to stay at home and attend to his business except when called away to attend meetings of the Association. This is a step forward and in line with progress such as should mark the path of the A. P. A. from now on. But what will the candidates for the job do who are holding down jobs or are engaged in business that requires most of their time?

Licensed Judges seems to be a subject quite popular with several of our esteemed contemporaries just now. Whether licensing poultry Judges by the American Poultry Association will remedy many of the so-called existing evils such as incompetent and weak-kneed judging is a moated question. An instance of licensing judges can be found in the Empire State where some self-constituted association, calling itself a State organization, or rather implying that it has State authority, sends out a list of judges to the Secretaries of county and State fairs, recommending judges for the different departments. On the poultry list we find just three, viz.: J. Y. Bickull, J. D. Jacquins and R. D. Button. Now we have no objection whatever to publishing the above as all three are no doubt competent to do the work assigned, but what has become of the men in the Empire State that officiate at the leading and other shows? There are quite a few judges of experience in New York whose services are sought not only at shows held in the latter but by the management of exhibitions in other States. That just three men should be selected seems strange. Some years ago it cost one dollar a year to get a name on the judge's list and it is a well-known fact that men of experience and reputation do not care to subscribe a dollar for the purpose of getting their names on a list that is of very little benefit to them. A card in a reputable poultry paper is all they need and this is more for the convenience of the Secretaries when writing to them than from any desire to solicit jobs in new territories. The trouble with quite a few country fairs is in not having proper men and consequently cheap premiums and still cheaper judges are the result. If the State of New York thought its State Fair Commission would publish a complete list of all judges that are known to be competent by their past engagements at fall and winter shows, it would prove a help to Secretaries of agricultural fairs in selecting those nearest to their locality and save the mileage and other necessary traveling expenses. This is not licensing judges but a very fair protection against hiring incompetent and interested individuals to pass on the merits of the birds. At a show held recently, where there was a long string of birds including many ornamental varieties, a local man was put in to judge, who never had any experience as a judge and was absolutely ignorant of the requirements of the hundred or more Standard varieties on exhibition. This is what hurts our fall exhibitions as the latter are very numerous in New York State, the folly of placing only three men on the so-called judges list referred to above is apparent. At some big fairs it would take all three to do the work and there would be dozens of other fairs minus the services of competent men, if they had to depend on the three mentioned.

The right way to select judges at all shows big or little is by the vote of the poultrymen that make up the society giving exhibitions. In Canada this method is followed to a great extent, the Ontario Poultry Association, a large and influential body of progressive poultry fanciers put all such selections to a vote and men are engaged for the different varieties they are supposed to be most familiar with, and it makes no difference where they live or how far they are from the place where the show is held, they are engaged simply for their ability regardless of the expense incurred. Exhibitors are entitled to a square deal and it is privileged to demand such from all managers of country or State fairs and winter shows.

Nothing destroys the confidence in a management more than a lack of sand in selecting the proper judges. We heard of a case recently where a most competent judge, a man who has judged at the best of shows for years, was engaged in good faith to award the prizes at an important county fair. A committee of three waited on the officers of the society and demanded that another judge be appointed, which we regret to say, was done. It was a personal grudge that influenced the committee to go before the officers of the Agricultural Society; it was a lack of sand that made the latter do what is likely to cause a very bad precedent as well as considerable ill-feeling and trouble. If managers of fairs and shows pay heed to every complaint made by disgruntled exhibitors, there would be no judge immune from abuse and consequently no self-respecting man available to do the work. There has been altogether too much of the "favor me and I'll favor you" system in selecting judges at county fairs. It's a case of reciprocity that works well for the judges but exhibitors are often the sufferers. When Secretaries and superintendents swap jobs simply for the little money they get for judging at thir respective shows, it is time to look this matter square in the face. All-around judges are very scarce. There are too many varieties of poultry to-day, for any man without experience, to judge with any degree of satisfaction, either to himself or to the exhibitors. A man may be a most excellent judge of all the American varieties yet fall all over himself and get completely rattled when confronted with large and warm classes of Games and Game Bantams. It is pot luck for the exhibitors of the latter in such instances, in fact if the entry numbers of each class of birds be placed in a hat and the first and second prizes drawn therefrom it comes about as near as some individuals do when they tackle classes they know nothing about. This applies to the score card as well as to comparison method of judging. At a scoring matinee last winter a Judge scored a Malay Game as a Cornish Indian and the wearer of the ermine was a gentleman of national reputation and a most ardent advocate of the score card.

Another evil is the exhibitor judge. Get a few of that tribe together doing a circuit of fall shows and there is trouble ahead for other exhibitors not in the know. The spectacle of watching a judge, his own string of birds shown by a convenient partner at one show and then watching the latter act on the same birds shown in the name of the former is not only amusing in its boldness but disgusting in its effect on the balance of the exhibitors, especially when the red and blue ribbons are gathered in with monotonous regularity by partner, exhibitor-judge syndicate. The managers of agricultural fairs who tolerate such performances are to blame. They do not live up to the rule that forbids any judge from passing on any class he has a direct or indirect interest in. This rule was repeatedly violated last season by some of the New York country fair managers and caused no end of ill feeling and adverse comment. Perhaps if the State appropriation was withheld from such fairs there might be a decided step taken to wipe out the evil for once and forever.

The premium list of the great Hagerstown Fair is ready and should be in the hands of all intending exhibitors by this time. No efforts are being spared to make the coming poultry and pigeon exhibts at Hagerstown next October fully equal to the great shows held there in the past and made famous by the late John L. Cost. Superintendent Betts and Secretary J. Frank Spahr, who did so handsomely last year are again in charge, so we may look for a great gathering of birds and fanciers.

The Flower City Poultry Association is a thing of the past, all its coops having been bought by the new Genesee Valley Poultry and Pigeon Association, the members of the old club joining the new so that one great show will be held at Rochester, New York with all hands pulling hard for success. The annual exhibition will be held at Colonial Hall, January 22 to 26, 1907. Mr. F. A. Newman has been elected Secretary.

The members of the Adirondack Poultry Club of Johnston, N. Y., and of the Electric City Poultry Association of Schenectady, N. Y., enjoyed a great outing and clam bake last Saturday at Mr. Edward T. De Graff's Poultry Farm, Amsterdam, N. Y. Mr. DeGraff made an ideal host and his beautiful grounds back of the famous poultry plant, a great spot for the boys to enjoy the sports and refreshments provided. A large number of fanciers attended and felt the better for the association and good fellowship such occasions are bound to produce. The poultry talks in the evening were quite a feature, being instructive as well as amusing. It takes a bunch of real fanciers to get good, clean sport and enjoyment at gatherings of this kind.

Canada's great fair is on the carpet at Toronto this week. It is almost needless to say that the poultry and pigeon departments are up to the standard of the other departments, because that is an obvious result when such progressive and liberal policies prevail. Toronto is the model fair on the American Continent. If there is anything as good on the other side of the pond we have not heard of it.

Cortland, New York, started the ball rolling in great shape as far as poultry exhibits are concerned, last week. Mr. "Billy" Greenman, Secretary of the Cortland Fair is one of those magnetic individuals that commands respect and gathers in entries. A strong personality, bubbling over with good humor, diplomatic as well as democratic, he is everybodys friend. Being a hustler besides, there can be no wonder at his success in building up a fair in a comparatively small city, to proportions that some of our more pretentious country fairs never dreamed of. He believes in the "open door." That is why so many fine strings of birds were at Cortland.

When the entry fees run considerably over one thousand dollars and the big hall over the domestic department building is piled three and four tiers high with choice feathered pets, running up in numbers exceeding four thousand a fair idea of the magnitude of the show can be obtained. That is what happened at Cortland. Birds had to be shown in their owner's coops, while the judging was done in an enclosure provided with several rows of empty coops for the birds to be judged in. Exhibitors and attendants carried the entries to these coops. This entailed much labor but was appreciated by the judges. The latter had a hard task. The weather was insufferably hot and the entries very large for two men to handle in the time allotted. It took two days and the part of another day to finish the job, and everybody was glad when the latter was completed. The absence of fault finding over the awards was a most pleasant feature.

It is simply impossible to go into detailed descriptions of the birds at this show. The awards which will be published later give a complete record of who was there and who won. When Ornamental Bantams run upward of three hundred and Game Bantams number over two hundred and fifty, readers of this paper can imagine the heavy classes and the hot competition. With men like Blunck, Oliver, Turner, Bean, Burns and Smith showing big exhibits to say nothing of the numerous smaller exhibitors there was something doing in the Bantam alley every minute the judging was going on. It was a great treat for the judges to handle such classes some of the individual specimens being bred in the purple. Mr. H. J. Quilbot and the writer of these notes, who judged the show, came to the conclusion that it will be a long time before they will see another such collection of birds together. Being the first show all the big fellows got in but they will try and avoid each other on the fall circuit hereafter.

SILVER PENCILED HAMBURGHS.

By the Rev. C. D. Farrar.

For elegance and beauty of outline nothing can beat the silver pencil show cock. He is the very picture of bird beauty. Anything more lovely than a good pen on a grass lawn it is hard to imagine. Silver pencils have improved wonderfully of late years, and one generally sees a bird or two in the season well night perfect. I have at the present moment about half a dozen cockerels nearly in full feather, and they are a perfect picture.

I will begin as before, with the cock-breeding pen. The novice should get hold of the very best cockerel of the year if he can afford it. Silver pencil cockerels if good are very easy to sell; and ten guineas is readily obtainable for a good one, while £4 to £5 will be the cost of a good-all-round chicken. The difference in price all goes by the tail. Take two birds in adjoining pens between which there apparently is little or no difference; but the novice will be astonished at the difference in the price, if one has a good tail and the other a poor one.

Silver pencils, if really good, have probably the most magnificent tails among all the Hamburghs—certainly for length and furnishing, though not perhaps for width of feather, but being smaller birds this is not to be wondered at.

In selecting a cockerel, "fineness of lacing" should be looked for, and the finer the lacing the more valuable the bird. My cockerels this year are as finely laced as though the white edging had been put on with a pencil. The white lacing should go all round the feather, not on one side only—and it should include not only the "hangers," but the sickles. Anything finer than such a tail it is difficult to imagine. The color of the feathers must be a rich glossy green; many cockerels are dull black, but this is a great blemish. I very much dislike a "gay" tail—that is to say, a tail with very broad lacing, though some judges are unable to appreciate fineness of lacing, and always go for these gay tailed birds, to the great disgust of those who really know and understand the variety.

Next to the tail comes color. The body of the cockerel must be as white as driven snow. Many cocks fail very much in color, being quite of a lemon tinge. The novice will be told the usual fairy tales about the hot sun and running out in all weathers; do not believe them! A pure colored bird will keep white, no matter what the weather may be. Therefore in buying, insist on having a really white bird.

The weak point is the shoulders; here many cockerels are quite "salmony." They used to be brassy, though I think this is about bred out; but mind the shoulders are pure. The head of the cockerel is usually very good, and the comb especially smart. Be sure to get a sound-faced bird; very many cockerels here fail badly. The ears should be smooth, white, and round, and about as big as a shilling. The legs are blue.

Our Colored Supplement.

The first of a series of colored supplements to appear in the American Fancier during the coming year is issued with this number, and every subscriber should receive a copy with his paper dated September 1, 1906. The colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham, and is a faithful picture of the champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male of America. Mr. Graham's orders were to paint the bird as he found him in the yards last May. The artist spent an entire day photographing different sections, besides taking feathers from each important section to assist him in developing the color effects. Many who have seen this bird will easily recognize him in the picture. Extra copies of this picture can be obtained at ten cents each from the American Fancier office.

Like Old Times.

To The American Fancier:

It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,

Very respectfully,
ELLIS DUNTZ.
Glencoe Mills, N. Y., May 3, 1906.

Beginning with this issue the American Fancier enters its fourteenth year, and to celebrate its anniversary the publishers could conceive of no better manner of improvement than to make a change in the headings. This has been done and we are sure will meet with general approval.

As a child grows the costumes are changed, so it is with the progressive enterprises of the world, as time goes slowly stealing along new ideas advance, improvements are made and then we wonder how people managed to exist under the old methods but they did. In this age of rapid improvement we are glad to say the Pigeon Fancy has kept pace. A few and we are glad to say only a few, may say better birds were shown in years past, in some varieties, yes, but the fancy as a whole, no. So fast has been the improvement that the winners of specials and cups a few years ago only gain distinction now by being the ancestors of the present day champions.

Mr. C. A. Koehler has been selected by the American Jacobin Club to place the ribbons at their next annual meet to be held at Madison Square Garden, January 1-5, 1907. No better selection could have been made as Mr. Koehler has been a most ardent admirer and student of the Jacobin for years. Having bred many champions and keeping in such close touch with the fancy should make Mr. Koehler a most satisfactory judge.

The Westchester County Fair held at White Plains, N. Y., September 17-22, offers a most excellent classification, liberal prize money and many specials in the pigeon department. Wm. J. Stanton will judge the pigeons. For premium list address Ed. Long, White Plains, N. Y.

The pigeons at the Inter-State Fair at Trenton, N. J., September 24-28 will be judged by Messrs George Spohn, Wm. Kennedy and H. V. Crawford.

At this time of the year the utmost care should be given to your birds. The moulting season is oftimes the stumbling block for the young fancier. Don't forget the bath, it is as essential now as any time of the season, in fact more so, as it greatly benefits the youngsters in casting their feathers. Plenty of grit should be before the birds, and a good plan is to add a few drops of tincture of iron to the drinking water. Hemp seed can be given once or twice a week with good results but the steady diet should be Canada peas, small round corn, wheat and a little canary seed mixed.

The Rev. W. F. Lumley advocates the diverson of lofts into compartments where there are not facilities for having separate houses for the several distinct purposes of which pigeon keeping is made. It is generally found the unsuccessful fancier to be a person possessed of a large stud herded together in one loft, show birds, feeders, squeakers, squabs, etc., mixed and crossed to their full. The mongrels, or low class birds, predominate under such circumstances should not be a matter of surprise to anyone. That many of the true bred youngsters can survive such gipsey encampment is a matter of wonder. The lofts should be three. First, the best, with the largest aviary tenanted by show birds, both breeding and exhibition quarters. Second, this loft for the feeders which have constant liberty. Third, entirely for the young stock, as soon as they can care for themselves they should be placed in a separate building.

We find in the very interesting catalogue issued by Mr. George E. Gray, an article regarding the breeding of exhibition pigeons.

Mr. Gray's opinion regarding breeding should carry some weight as his "Forest Gate" stud of Fantails were built on original ideas of his own, and have proved successful. Shown by his wonderful winnings and quality of stock produced.

"Breeding is generally, however, acknowledged to be a great uncertainty, never mind how carefully the birds may be paired up, nor how good the stock may be. Bad points will come out far more persistently than the good ones, but in the end if bred to a system nature must give way and the desired points cannot help developing. Now, from these undeniable facts it must be obvious how important it is to breed that is systematically bred, and has as few of the bad and undesirable points as possible in their blood. Say, for instance, two birds are paired together with peaks. The result will be this property is fixed in the strain, and the progeny of these birds, although they may not themselves be peaked, the greater percentage of them should be and most likely will be. Now, one of these youngsters may not be a peaked bird, but it will clearly be seen how dangerous it is to breed from such stock bred in this careless and haphazard way. On the other hand, say, two big-tailed birds are bred together for tail properties—that is, length of feather and spread, which to my mind are the most difficult to breed and to keep. It is surprising how disappointing the results often are. The big tails do not come out so freely as one might expect. However, breed these youngsters, which, although not themselves visibly possessing tail, have it so strongly in their blood, to big-tailed birds again, and it is practically a certainty the desired result will be forthcoming. Now, a fancier may buy a pair of birds not possessing much tail in themselves, but which have been bred from big-tailed birds, as mentioned in the preceding paragraph, and pair them together, with results most surprising and pleasing to himself. Some of the young ones may possibly possess such huge tails that their owners cannot understand where it comes from. The breeder of the parents, however, could easily acocunt for it."

"The motto in breeding, therefore, is, on the one hand, never fix faulty points in your strain by pairing birds together both possessing the same faults, but on the other hand fix the desirable properties by pairing up birds both possessing these points in as great a degree as possible."

Mr. Gray started in the Fantail Fancy about eleven years ago. Purchasing a couple of pairs of whites from Mr. J. Lee for $35, but only a short while after obtained from Mr. Marshall Harvey the Blue hen, Blue Belle, winner of all the leading prizes at that time for $100, so we see our English cousin started with the stuff. It is all rot this trying to build an exhibition strain of birds with inferior stock, it may be done to a certain extent but only with the addition of new and better blood. If the beginner would only purchase at the start the ancestors or progeny of winners not winners of 1st at Squedunk but winners at our big shows where competition is strong. They would save both time and money, and would have some possible chance to produce specimens of merit. Not winning the much coveted first, does not say the quality is not of the best and of the proper type.

After making the right start Mr. Gray was blessed in having a pocket book whereby he could purchase nearly every bird that suited his fancy, and it seems the only specimens that suited his fancy were the winners at the larger shows. In a few years his lofts sheltered nearly every champion in his variety.

This had a decided bad effect on the fancy abroad, the same has often occurred in this country. Instead of sweeping the deck again and again the "Forest Gate" Lofts began to sell the old birds (all great winners) and refrain from exhibiting only the progeny in the young classes.

The result was at the last Palace show the competition was between over a dozen fanciers whose stock was of the highest.

We are pleased to reproduce the Forest Gate Lofts and aviaries showing the stupendous breeding quarters where over 700 fantails are bred annually.

Mr. Gray's letter received during the past month states he is well on the fifth gross of 1906 bands and not finished yet.

As Mr. George E. Gray is the peer of the Fantail Fancy in England Messrs. Havermeyer Bros., owners of the famous Mountain Side Farm have that honor in America.

This farm is located at Mahwah, N. J., about 30 miles from New York City on the Erie R. R., situated as it is in the Ramapo Mountains makes it an ideal place for the successful raising of poultry and pigeons. It contains something over 3,000 acres, so you see they have plenty of room, a most important feature, but still some do very well on less ground..

The reproduction is a section of the Fantail Lofts showing the aviaries. These contain probably the best collection of fantails all colors in the world, this is saying a great deal, we know, but after taking everything into consideration we must give credit where credit is due.

For the past fifteen years birds from the lofts of Messrs. Havemeyer Bros. have held the premier positions in America, they have captured the majority of specials, cups, etc., offered by the American Associations and Clubs, have had the honor of winning the British Fantail Club's Challenge Bowl for the best Blue Fantail at the Crystal Palace, England.

Although not raising the quantity of youngsters as Mr. Gray, they are turned out in goodly numbers in the swamps of Jersey.

The combination of quantity and quality seems to go together with these gentlemen. The only disadvantage of these is not having sufficient time to properly prepare these specimens for the shows. In Mr. James Glasgow, Messrs. Havemeyer Bros. have a most able manager, as the points not known to him are really not worth knowing.

Mr. T. A. Havemeyer, for many years president of the Eastern Fantail Club, has done more for the Fantail fancy in America than most specialty clubs in the way of advancing the interests of their varieties. A few years past the whites were about the only variety of the Fantail shown, to-day how different, blacks, saddles, reds, yellows and blues are perfected to that degree where it is no uncommon occurancc to see the special for the best in the show attached to one of these colors. And this has been through the untiring efforts of Mr. Havemeyer and the Eastern Fantail Club.

HOMING PIGEONS.

(By Clayfield, in Feathered World.)

There are abundant indications that with the progress of the new year societies and organizations in connection with our sport are beginning to waken into activity and life. Many of the larger and more important societies have already placed their program before the Fancy, whilst the smaller clubs are now beginning to hold business meetings for the arrangement of the racing season. I know from experience the difficulty of getting club members together to discuss various methods whereby the competition can be increased in its scope of operation, or strengthened in its present position. It seems that there is a very strong feeling amongst the rank and file to allow things to slide rather than to begin discussing matters at an early date, so as to allow plenty of time to inquire into this or that system, or new departure in management. Shows will fetch these indicerent ones up o the scratch; dinners will fetch them; a good, healthy smoking concert will fetch them; but a hard matter-of-fact business meeting—not much. If you tackle them and say, "Come to the meeting; lots of questions to decide," as a rule it is a case of "very busy; you'll manage all right. I shall be ready to agree with what is done by the committee. I shall stand by what the meeting passes," etc., etc. Now, this is not business; it is not encouraging to the few who do attend regularly, and who devote much of their time to the interests of the sport. I hold that if a man is a member of any society whatever, no matter what its objects are, he, as an interested party, is bound to attend and take an equal share of work, responsibility, and th[illegible]ht. You will generally find that th[illegible]on-attending brigade of most societies are the ones who have the most shouting to do after the event. They are the ones to tell you how it ought to have been done—"so easy, you know, [illegible]ank carelessness to arrange it on those lines. Any chump could have foreseen the danger." "Quite so; it's all right. Then why did you not turn up when we were arranging it? Then, you see, by your superior insight, disaster would have been averted." So the game goes on. I do not for a moment imagine that we are any worse off than scores of other fancies which have a goodly stock of wiseacres after the event. Turn up, I say, at the meetings, even if it is a nippy night and you have to leave a cheerful fireside to do so. Then, and then only, shall we ever hope to get the best out of our organizations.

However, in spite of the shortcomings of a large number of our fanciers, someone in every part of the country must be working cheerfully and hard to put things in order for the season which is fast approaching, and, judging from the various events as they stand arranged to-day, there is evidence of much careful thought and desire for advancement evinced in the programs of which I have had news up to date.

In Yorkshire there is a broader and wider scope of competition than has ever prevailed in previous years. The Yorkshire Federation is providing £50 for competition amongst its own members from Rennes, whilst the Yorkshire Combine, which includes the remaining smaller federations—Leeds, Wakefield, West Yorkshire, Heavy Woolen, and the newly formed North-West Yorkshire—is also guaranteeing £50 from Rennes. I am given to understand that the old Yorkshire Federation was approached and asked to attend a meeting called at Huddersfield on Saturday, January 14th; but they did not avail themselves of the invitation, and consequently the federations represented had to make a start without the Yorkshire; and a star[illegible]ey did make, and, judging by the enthusiasm and energy displayed, one feels quite justified in predicting a successful venture. It behooves Yorkshire fanciers to carefully weigh up the two events, and, if carefully weighed up, there can be no doubt but that the Combine will receive the support of all fair-minded sportsmen. Its action has none of the dog-in-the-manger business about it because it was first in the field. It invited the [illegible]e federations of Yorkshire to participate. It throws its doors open to any competitor residing in Yorkshire; it will raise the money from the actual competitors in the event, and not from a general fund to which non-competitors will have to contribute; it is managed by some of the best long-distance men in Yorkshire; and lastly, [illegible] not least, it has sharpened some of Yorkshire's talkee, talkee men up to the needs of the long-distance men in the country.

I mentioned the Lancashire Combine split in my notes some few weeks back, and it seems my information was fairly correct, as I recieved word in February from an old friend in Lancashire to the effect that the Lancashire Central Federation was withdrawn from the Lancashire Combine, and are intending running a Rennes race of their own. I am sorry that our Central friends have decided upon this step, because I firmly believe that if the stuck to the Combine they would have had their grievances righted at an early date, as several of the Combine delegates were in sympathy with their demands, which really amounted in the main to a question of representation by virtue of numerical strength, and also that of levy for management, upon which question, I understand, there has been considerable friction, the Central's argument being that certain management expenses such as secretary's salary, telegrams, postage, stationery, etc., should be levied for by a charge per member and not per federation. However, the split has taken place, and it is hoped that both organizations have a successful affair.

The "Forest Gate" Loft and Aviaries, Owned by George E. Gray, Esq.

Scotland is advancing rapidly in all matters pertaining to our sport, as their National race looks like going strong in 1906. I have every confidence in our friends across the border, and I can safely predict an opening out of the sport in the land of the thistle. That there are good fanciers there we have abundant proof, and a movement which is on foot to establish a Scottish centre of the Homing Union will, if brought to a successful issue, do much to stimulate and develop the Fancy.

RINGING AND STAMPING THE BIRDS FOR RACING.

In explaining this necessary, and important part of our sport, I wish at the outset to crave the indulgence of the old and experienced fancier. It may appear to such that I am going over the ground in too careful and slow a manner, but I wish to point out that after all there is a deal of truth in the old saying, "familiarity breeds contempt," and to a lot of us, who may have had years of experience, who may have rung thousands of birds from time to time, this careful explanation of the most important part of our work may appear like "taking coals to Newcastle," but looked at in a proper light it s not so. Hundreds of fanciers—to say nothing of the non-fanciers—have never seen a bird rung or stamped for a race in their lives, and to such the whole business is as a sealed book. I will just give you one instance to show how dense some non-fanciers are in regard to our sport. A gentleman asked me one day if I had any objection to showing him round my lofts. Could he look at some birds which had actually flown scores of miles to my loft? Of course, I was only too glad to invite him over to have a look around. He came, was delighted with the birds. "Well, well! actually flown 200 miles to your loft! Wonderful! And I suppose they will fly it just as readily from your loft to the other end?" I repeat that familiarity breeds contempt," and what to fanciers or racing men is a mere every-day occurrence is to the uninitiated "wonderful, mysterious, and in a sense inexplicable."

I will treat of race ringing first. In adopting this method a rubber ring is used, upon which is printed a letter and a number one the outside; and on the inside, which is fastened up by a solution, is a number only, and whilst the outside number is readable the inside is not in view, and to all intents and purposes secret. The only key to this number is printed on a slip of paper, to which each ring is attached. This paper is in turn also folded and sealed at the edges with gum, so that, whilst the outer number can be clearly read, and tallies with the rubber ring, the inside number is a secret. Now, when the bird arrives from a race, the rubber ring is taken off its leg and opened, the outside and inside number is then written down by the competitor, and either wired in from the nearest post-office or pushed into a clock which is made for the purpose, which registers the exact time at which the ring was put into the clock. If wired in, then the telegram gives time handed in, and after deducting time allowance for reaching post office is the time of the bird's arrival. When the officials of the club have the ring or telegram before them, they look amongst the particular competitor's race ring paper duplicates and find the one with the same outside number as he wires in. This, when opened, should tally with the inside number of ring. If so, then there is no doubt as to the particular bird which caried the ring to the race having duly arrived home at time stated either by clock or telegram.

Race Stamping.—It is customary in some societies to stamp the race numbers on the flights of the birds by means of rubber stamps, and when the bird arrives home that number carried on its wing is written out, and either wired or clocked in, just as the rubber race ring is dealt with. Of course, the numbers are varied week by week, and sometimes a device—an animal or bird—is also stamped on wing, which has to be given along with number. For instance, say the first race a bird is stamped on flight 260; next week the number may be 2,260, or 2,609, and so on. There is a special committee generally apointed to stamp the birds, which is done in private, and no fancier is allowed in the stamping room whilst the birds are being marked.

I have never had any practical experience of racing stamped birds, but must admit that I much prefer the rubber race rings. A secret is never a secret when more than one knows it, and when no man knows the number a bird carries, unless he tampers with the race ring duplicates, which is the only way possible for anyone to know the inside rubber ring number, I consider it safer and likely to inspire more confidence in the majority of cases.

Mapping.—For the purpose of ascertaining the actual distance in miles and yards each member's loft is from the race point, it is necessary that the society procure one or more ordnance maps, which can be purchased from most first-class stationers, and cost one shilling each, and of course the number required varies in proportion to the ground covered by the radius; but you will generally find that stationers keep only the sections in stock covering the immediate locality, so that it is an easy matter to ask for 6in. ordnance maps covering the area of your club, and you will soon discover whether you require one or more. Having procured your maps, your next business is to locate the "xact spot upon the map" where the various lofts are situate. Having located the loft, it is only necessary to make a slight puncture with a pin point. Remember that a mere trifle off the exact spot means many yards difference in mapping. Having pricked the map at the spot required, draw a red ink line from it to the edge of the map, which has a margin of an inch of clear paper all round. On the marginal end of your red ink line write name of owner of loft, or, in some cases, a number is used, and the number written on back of map, thus —"No. 1, John Smith; No. 2, J. Jones," and so on. You will then send your map marked as above to a person qualified to calculate the distance exactly, which he will do at costs varying from 6d. per loft per race stage, down to 1s. for each loft to all race points, this latter cost only in cases where a man has maps belonging to a federation or combine, and has therefore no money laid down as a private venture, and by virture of the maps having long since paid their cost. I believe there are several systems of calculation used by various mappers. I have had experience of two methods. The means used in one system I do not know; in the other and later method the "great circle" measurement was used. I do not profess to understand this system, but one thing I do know, it has proved very, very safe and reliable so far as ever we have tested it. Under the old system, lofts situate only a few yards north or south of each other were in some cases as much as half a mile different when mapped, and when one comes to consider that in many short races a yard per minute will perhaps only divide the first three or four competitors, it will not take much argument of mine to show that such a discrepancy is a serious matter. Therefore it will well repay a competitor to indulge in the "great circle" system of measurement; then he has the satisfaction of knowing that he is correctly mapped. The ordnance maps are returned, of course, with the measurements, so that once purchased they are usable time after time as occasion arises by new members joining the society. It is usual to ask any new members to apear before the committee and have their loft located at the meeting. To anyone uninitiated in maps, it is a very confusing thing finding the identical field or backyard required, so that if the secretary has got the main roads, lanes, and streets well located he can materially help the new beginner in tracing out his exact position.

Timing Machines or Clocks—I have somewhat touched upon this matter in my remarks upon ringing, but to give a proper idea I will just add that there are many classes, styles, and patents before the Fancy, and it is only experience which enables a man to say good, bad or indifferent, as the case may be. Having had five years as secretary of a fairly large club—thirty-four flying members at present—it has often been my lot to see mishaps and errors in timing in, in some cases preventable, in others accidents or misfortunes pure and simple. There is no doubt about the matter that a clock or timing machine which is constantly going, and registers automatically the exact time of the ring being put into the clock, is much preferable to the machines which are known as "stop and start clocks," in which the time of clock when ring was put in is not shown at a glance, but is a question of calculation. I am well aware that there are thousands of these stop and start clocks in use in Yorkshire and Lancashire alone, and so long as the competitors agree to use them, and are satisfied with their work, so and good. As a matter of fact, all my members use stop and start clocks of various makes; and why? Simply because they are within reach, so far as price goes, of every working man. You can buy one of best for about a sovereign, and others as low as 10s.; whilst a good make of the clocks, which are always running and register exact time of day when your ring was put in, cost between three and five guineas—rather a stiff price for an average working man. Still, in comparison, we must at once admit that they are superior to a cheap manchine. To a new club or society just commencing I would submit the following suggestion. If there are sufficient men near to any given centre where a clock could be stationed, and say three, four or more members run to it and have running time reckoned off, these three or four could join hands and purchase one clock to serve the lot, as these clocks will register up to twenty birds, and as each ring goes in the clock, and is moved on along with paper dial, showing to a second when it was punctured, there is no possibility of any misunderstanding. The stop and start machines are only capable of registering one bird per clock, and are worked upon a different system entirely—namely, one of calculation.

It is usual to stop and set all stop and start machines at 12 o'clock—that is to say, the hands are both put to twelve exact. The clock is then wound up, sealed and stamped, so as to render access to it impossible without leaving some trace. Along the top is a narrow slit, covered with a brass slide, which is opened just about a quarter of an inch, so as to enable the rubber ring to be pushed through. This ring drops into a little metal receptacle provided for its reception. The brass slide is pushed on, which completely covers the narrow slit and cannot be opened again until the clock seals are cut loose; nor can the clock be started until the aperture is closed up, and, if closed, of course the rubber ring could not be put in.

THE ARCHANGEL.

The Origin of the Name, Points, Etc.

Various opinions are expressed concerning the name of this pigeon. The one commonly accepted, and that entirely upon supposition, is that Archangel, the town of Russia, had the honor of originating the variety. The foundation for the name, however, as we can trace the bird, lies in the iridescent hues of its plumage, referring it to the rainbow, the arc-en-ciel of the French, with whom we find the first mention of it.

To no other of the pigeon family is the name so aptly applied, as, while others may combine brilliancy and depth of color, this alone has the lustre, the sheen which shows a different shade in each different light. This lustre is said to be due to a peculiar formation of the web of the feather, easily to be seen under the microscope.

Mr. Arthur Allen, one of the best judges of the variety, says:

The true type should be of a bold, dashing, wild nature, carrying its flight feathers well closed over its rump, so that the tips meet together. The buts of the wings would stand well forward, but not beyond the breast, which should be very full; while the neck should be slender. The head should be snakey in appearance. The feathers of the back of the neck should be very smooth and even, and leading straight up without a break to the tip of the peak, which should be needle-pointed and standing well up above the top of the head. The beak should be of medium length, certainly not a short one, and on nearly the end of the upper mandible a splash of black. It should not be all black, but black would be preferable to white beaks, which cannot be too strongly condemned, always producing (or nearly so) a pearl-eyed progeny.

The eye should be of a deep orange color (but not red, as many suppose) and no trace of eye-cere; the feet blood-red. Next as to color and lustre, over which there has been much controversy. I condemn entirely the dark birds, and neither would I establish two varieties. There is but one true Archangel, and every bird that does not correspond with the real type is a misrepresentation.

The whole of the head, neck, breast, belly and thighs, down past the vent to the tip of the tail underneath, should be of a rich dark bronze. When I say dark I do not mean the dark green hue which has been shown so much during the past season. I would lay the greatest stress on this particular. Although some of the birds of the finest lustre are to be found amongst those birds which exhibit this green sheen, I would studiously pass by every bird in the show pen which possessed it, because I think it entirely destroys the true type, and such birds which undoubtedly do possess the most brilliant lustre can be bred by the thousand, while those of the true dark bronze only by units. The only and real places where the green tinge should appear should be at the bottom back part of the neck where it joins the body, and as much of it as possible on the dark black color of the wings and rump, but not a vestige of it on the head, upper part of the neck, nor anywhere about the breast, belly or thighs.

Coming to the hind part of the bird, the wings, rump and tail should be one solid black, the whole covered with the beautiful green shade already described. There should be no trace of a bar at the end of the tail.

A sad fault with many birds shown is in the prevalence of ticked wings, and which seems to be on the increase. I would much rather see the brown tinge showing through the black on the half of every feather on the wing than the slightest sign of a ticked feather, for, whereas the latter signifies the commonest type of Archangel, the former brown tinge speaks of very rich blood, but I would encourage neither.

To distinguish between the desirable and undesirable shades of bronze I would illustrate the distinction by a newly-coined penny of the old and new type—the color of a new penny-piece of the old type being the right style, the bronze of the new coin of the present day is too light a shade.

Fulton says: The proper color is a deep rich copper over head, neck, breast and body, excepting only the sides and the tail, which should be a bronzed black. This, however, refers to the color merely. The lustre defies description, and when the bird is seen in the sun displays almost all the colors of the rainbow with a bright metallic glitter, more resembling perhaps that of "shot silk" than anything else I can call in mind, and putting on a change of hue with every change of position. The black shoulders are nearly as beautiful as the rest, showing all kinds of blue, green and brone reflections. This is the only pigeon that exhibts such lustre on the rump, which in most birds is the dullest part of the plumage, but in the Archangel seems to show the same brightness as the rest.

To be seen as I describe depends very much upon the condition of the bird, which, of course, must be in good health and with nice tight plumage to show to advantage. The tail is often said to be of the same bronzy black as the shoulders, but though I have seen several specimens that deserved to be called perfect in all points but this, I have never yet seen a single bird with such a tail. The best I have seen being a dark-bluish black color, a distinct black bar being seen at the end as in blue or blue-black pigeons. I have seen hundreds but never one yet free from this fault, though some of them when in the show pen look almost black, but even this was too often owing to treatment by the owners, and in all cases close inspection would show the black band. This point, therefore, still remains to be possible vanquished by fanciers, since it can hardly be doubted that the pure metalic black tail is the standard desired.

Besides the deep and glossy copper-color there in another well-known color of the Archangel, which may be described as a soft, yellow, something like a soft-colored dun tumbler. This color shows very little lustre, however, and as this is the most characteristic property of the breed, I consider it a very great error ever to place it over fair birds of the proper description, as I have once or twice seen done at shows. It is, however, of some value for breeding. The tail of this lighter color is apt to be still more blue than that of the other.

I have had in my possesion at different times other so-called varieties of the Archangel. Some pure whites, others with the head white, also the flights, the rest of the body being as in the Archangel proper. In Germany the variety with the head, neck and breast colored, and the rest white, is known, and described by Brent as the "colored-breasted" pigeon; but all these, in my opinion, are mere crosses, losing much of the true Archangel lustre even in the colored portions; and as this is the principal beauty of the pigeon I think such crosses ought not to be encouraged until at least show better results. It is, I think, that a cross with an Archangel is due the peculiar lustre of the fire pigeon. Crossing with it is well worth the attention of the toy fanciers. As a rule the first cross which is so attractive, but care and patience would in time probably produce novelties of value, as in the example just quoted. I have also thought frequently that a cross with a long-faced almond tumbler might perhaps produce the spangling of the almond with the lustre of the Archangel; and if so the combination would be most attractive and well worth the trouble to those who like to experiment, like the Germans, in creating new varieties.

Most of the best Archangels are to be found in the neighborhood of Birmingham, Eng., which may at present be considered as in some sort the headquarters of the breed.

The Archangel is hardy, and a very good breeder and feeder, giving hardly any trouble. I can say little upon matching for breeding, having done but little myself, and not knowing anyone else who has had very wide experience; but reasoning from analogy, I should say that when birds of the proper shade began to show insufficient lustre, they might probably be improved by mating with the lighter, soft-colored birds, just as we use the dun carrier to improve a black. Being a vigorous breed, inbreding may be carried on to a considerable extent without much danger.

ONE WHO HAS BRED A FEW.

WHITESIDE TUMBLERS.

By W. Shaw.

Whitesides were, undoubtedly, first produced from gay Mottles, and were originally shown with white backs. Afterwards, the colored back was decided upon, and the variety was greatly improved thereby; indeed, I look upon any tendency to white in the back as the greatest fault that a Whiteside can possess. In my own small stud I have always rigorously killed off any young bird that showed any such failing, and I think that I have benefitted the variety by doing so, for I have possesed many an old bird, gone off in every other show point, yet retaining the beautiful sound back of his strain until the very end of his life. As to who originated the sound back I am unable to say, but I have heard Dr. Creswell's name mentioned in connection with it, although I cannot vouch for the accuracy of my statement. Perhaps someone who may read these lines, and who possesses a more intimate knowledge of the very early history of the breed than I do, will supply the missing link between the past and the present.

Another fault to guard against is white feathers on the thighs or just at the back of them. All Whitesides are subject to this, more especially those without a mottle or self cross, and if one's birds show this failing to any great extent, the only thing is to resort to a self cross. Whitesides are found both muffed and clear-legged, and except for the foot feather of the points are identical. The following description applies to both varieties.

The first points, however, to consider are those of structural formation, as to my mind, no excellence of marking can atone for an utter absence of type. This variety, however, is well up to the average in this respect, more especially in the reds. Some of the truest Tumblers I have ever seen have been Whitesides, whilst, as for color, not even the self reds have surpassed, and rarely equalled, at least a dozen reds that I can remember to have seen. The yellows, as a whole, are not so good, many of them being pale and sickly in color, and failing also in head points.

The head should be bold, and full, round and free from flatness anywhere with full cheeks, fine cere, and a clear white eye. Beak, white in reds and yellows, and black in any other color. In all the very deep rich colored reds, however, there is a tendency to become stained in beak, more especially as the birds grow older, and this is looked upon by some judges as a most serious defect; indeed, I have known many grand birds left cardless at a show for this one fault alone. Whilst desiring to see a white beak on all red and yellow Tumblers as much as anyone, yet it is in the best interests of the breed that an all round decision should be given upon the birds submitted for competition, and I hold that no single fault is so serious as to condemn a bird entirely. In this case, it is the very best colored birds that are most likely to err, and I feel sure that no one who gives the matter a moment's thought would wish to see those deep colored pigeons, sound underneath (a point most difficult to obtain), penalized so severely for a minor fault such as slightly stained beak.

The neck should be short and thick to match the cobby build. Body short, broad at the shoulder, and tapering to the tail, which should also be short and carried clear of the ground; kel deep, legs and flights both short. The general appearance is that of a cobby, bold bird, with a juanty carriage, anything approaching a weed being particularly objectionable. It must not be supposed that I am advocating excessive size. Let all be in proportion. But there must be substance enough about a bird whatever its size may be to allow it to answer to the description of a cobby Pigeon.

The muffled birds should be rather larger than the clear legs, as a small bird generally has poor muffs, and looks an insignficant pigeon. The foot feather should be long, thick, and turned well back, the extremity of the muff being pointed slightly upwards. Avoid birds with heavy feather protruding out in front of them, this not being the correct food feather of a muffled Tumbler. The hocks, too, should be heavily feathered, the points being just clear of the ground. As to markings, the whole bird must be colored except the sides of the wings, from which it gets its name; these must be white. The ten primary flights and a small row of feathers growing at their base should be colored.

The color should be rich, sound, and even. In reds the flights and tail should approach as nearly as possible the body color, while the under part should be quite free from plum shade. It may be asked where such birds are to be found. I have, however, seen a few that would answer to this description, but I candidly confess that I do not believe that the red Whitesides are so good in color to-day as they were six years ago. Yellows should be of a golden shade, with sound colored flights, and even in color underneath. Blacks should be bright and lustrous, and whilst many of us have been striving to produce this masterpiece of the Whiteside Fancy, I am afraid that I cannot say that we have been successful as yet. That end can only be considered to have been attained when a strain has been produced that will breed true to its kind. A black Whiteside has appeared occasionally for several years back, but as their owners have always been also black Mottle breeders, and have rarely succeeded in producing another, except at long intervals, I can only assume the birds they have shown to have been sports from black Mottles; their white backs, too, rather confirm this assumption, and this alone should handicap them severely in competition with sound backed birds.

A sound headed, solid backed black Whiteside will carry all before it, and will, probably, command a higher price than any Tumbler yet produced. I will, however, hazard one small prophecy, and that is, that when a strain of black Whitesides, that will breed true to its kind, has been attained, the black Mottle will be found to have played a very small part indeed in its composition. The blue Whiteside has not yet, I believe, been attempted, but would be a very beautiful bird if bright in color. When one considers the great achievements of our predecessors, those grand old fanciers of the past, who had none of our present advantages, it does not seem an insuperable task to produce a bird of this kind. I am afraid, however, that most of us seek an immediate result. The pecuniary side of the question enters largely into our efforts, and we are not willing to spend our lives in adding another variety to those already in existence, merely to earn eternal renown among fanciers that are yet to come.

Muffled Whitesides are but little cultivated, and yet are one of the most beautiful of all the Tumbler varieties; and a good bird is almost certain to hold its own, no matter what competes against it.—Pigeons and Poultry.

DATES CLAIMED.

Under this heading there will appear each week a list of all the shows claiming dates for the coming season. Secretaries of poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in the dates selected as promptly as possible. It is not only a convenience and guide to secretaries of shows that have not selected their dates, but of great interest to readers of The American Fancier, a majority of whom are exhibitors.

Swamped With Orders.

To The American Fancier:

Kindly cut out my large classified advertisement and just run the small one. I am swamped with orders. Have had to refuse some. Have had as high as eleven settings of my best eggs ordered in one mail. Please cut the ad out as soon as possible. Wishing you success with your bright, newsy paper, I remain,

Very truly yours.
ARTHUR BOUCK.
Frankfort, N. Y., April 20, 1906.

The Right Sort of Inquiries.

To The American Fancier:

We are getting a great many inquiries from our advertisement in The American Fancier and they are of the right sort and have several fine sales under way. We care more for this class of inquiries than those we receive by the dozen and which never amount to anything.

PRAGER & SHILLING.
Chicago, Ill., April 26, 1906.

Good Returns.

To The American Fancier:

We received American Fancier with ad in it, and have already had good returns from the same.

Yours truly,
ATWOOD KREIDER
Lititz, Pa.

CLASSIFIED ADS

Notice.—No every other week or once a month contracts for classified advertisements will be accepted. See editorial page for classified ad rates.

PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCKS. FISHEL'S are the best in the world, winning more prizes at World's Fair than any other two White Rock Exhibitors. My new 48-page catalogue is the finest poultry catalogue ever issued. Send three 2-cent stamps for a copy. 5,000 birds to sell. Address U. R. Fishel, Box D, Hope, Ind. 532tf

EDDY'S BUFF ROCKS EXCLUSIVELY.—I have three hundred breeders mated for best results. Extra good layers. Eggs, special mating, three dollars per thirteen; regular $2 layers, $1. Discount on large orders. The Poplars, D. B. Eddy, Prop., Somerset, Mass. 94-tf

WORLD'S FAIR WINNERS.—COCKS, Cockerels, Pullets, for sale. Clean sweep wherever shown. Six first prizes at Poughkeepsie; more prizes New York State Fair, 1904-05, than twenty competitors combined. Cockerels, three dollars up; pullets, two. Edgewood Farm, Ballston Lake, N. Y. 588-tf

WHITE ROCKS. WINNERS OF WHITE Rock Silver Cup at Lititz, Dec. 05. Eggs from prize matings, $3 and $1.50 per 15. J. D. Koons, Northampton, Pa. 35-86

BOUCK'S BARRED ROCKS AT AUburn and Schenectady, 1905, won 9 firsts, 9 seconds, 2 silver cups. This season at Auburn, Frankfort, Schenectady, Gloversville, Herkimer, 55 regular, 35 special prizes. Best eggs, $3 per 15; $5 per 30; incubator eggs, $5 per 100. Arthur G. Bouck, Frankfort, N. Y.

CANADA'S BEST BARRED AND BUFF Rocks—I have mated some of the grandest specimens of these two varieties that can be found. Will give excellent value in eggs and stock. Fine illustrated catalogue on application. Eggs, $3.00 and $5.00 per sitting. Stock for sale. J. R. Boyce, Box 412, London, Canada. 647-693

"BUFF PLYMOUTH ROCKS" A GRAND lot of exhibition cockerels and pullets for sale. By far the best I have ever raised. Take advantage of early choice. Write for circular, or better still, come and select for yourself. George Fox, Torresdale, Phila., Pa. 663-675

WYANDOTTES.

The Latest and Best Book on Success With Poultry is

999 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

I want to send you a copy of this book free. It is a gold mine of practical information for the poultry-raiser. I call it "An Easy Lesson in Poultry Culture," because the lessons it teaches are easy to learn and easy to apply. My object in publishing this book is to point out how dollars in place of cents can be made in producing poultry and eggs for market purposes. It is stated so plainly that the novice can follow the directions and make a success of the poultry business. I especially commend the chapter, "The Back-Lotter" to the city dweller who wants to "try-out" this business before going into it on a large scale. And then I have another book—a good companion for this one—"Poultry Feeding for Profit" that you should have also. It is full of feeding facts that I know, from actual experience, will be valuable to every chicken raiser. It gives feeding methods and information that will be helpful every day, for every fowl on your place—from the little chick "just out" to the old hen you are fattening for market. There is lots of money in the poultry business if you know how to handle chickens right. These two books will give you all the information you'll need—information you can put into practice. You cannot get this information anywhere else. Write today, I will send both books free, and also send my catalog on Model Incubators and Brooders the latest and most successful hatching and rearing machines on the market.

FRIZZLE BANTAMS

BY GEORGE REYNER

The article and illustration published on this page are represented from the Feathered World, England. Both are timely as they call attention to one of the oddest and most attractive varieties of bantams ? ? ??? Mr. Reyner's article reads as follows:

This, to my mind the most quaint and charming of all varieties, is rapidly gaining popularity, as entries at our leading shows during the last few years fully prove, and although they have, as a rule, to compete in the Any Other Classes, they generally come off with flying colors. It is very rarely classes are provided for Frizzles alone, but thanks to our club, classes were provided at Kendal and Barnstaple this year, and the result was fourteen and seventeen entries respectively, which I think speaks for itself of their coming popularity. I have never been able to ascertain what country they came from, but should say Japan, as they most resemble the Japanese Bantam in general appearance, and from what I can hear came over to England about the same time.

I have kept Frizzle Bantams for over fifteen years, my first start being with a pen of reddish buffs, with black tails and flights, but they bred so erratically that I got disgusted with them, and some ten years ago I went in for blacks and whites. The blacks I got from the Countess of Darmouth (through a friend who had the disposal of her stock), and the whites from Mr. J. K. Lowther, of Tunbridge Wells, and Mr. Sydney Dance, of Southsea, and I have continued to breed and exhibit from these strains with results well known to the majority of my fellow members. Many people fail to see any beauty in Frizzles, but I can see nothing else, and I intend to stick to them as long as I am in a position to farm a bird at all, and I was very much pleased to hear our most worthy Secretary make the same remark at the last Palace Show. Next time you attend a show, especially a country show, look out for a pen containing a Frizzle, and I can guarantee you a good return for the time you spend opposite that pen, as the remarks made are generally both funny and original. The latest I heard was at a Yorkshire Show where two young fellows were looking round the Bants., when one, who was a few pens in front of the other, shouted out, "Well, I'll be blowed, Jack, if they haven't started breeding Chrysanthemum Bantams, and not a bad start neither; I expect if we come next year there'll be some Orchid Bantams, and these look Orchid (awkward) enough." The great drawback to successful exhibition of this variety is cold, drizzley weather, as they soon lose their beautiful curl, but on a bright sunny or sharp frosty day they look A1, and if clean, require nothing more from the exhibitor's hands but penning and feeding. Unfortunately, many of our present-day judges award prizes to the best curled specimens, irrespective of color of plumage, legs, etc., and I think this anything but right, and a thing that our club should try to alter, as, if I understand correctly, we are formed to improve the varieties we take into our fold, and not try to turn them into barndoor fowls, which many of the Frizzles exhibited to-day resemble, if it were not for their curl. For my own part I like self-colored birds, but do not at all object to black-reds, duckwings, or any other recognized variety, provided they are identical in comb, colors of plumage and legs, but I cannot stand the so-called black-reds with red and black mottled breasts, rose combs, and yellow legs.

Another point which judges overlook is size, and they do not take into consideration the different nature of feathering compared with, say, a Japanese; consequently a Frizzle generally gets pegged back on account of looking larger than it really is.

Frizzles I find are quite as hardy or hardier after they get six months old as any other variety, and I may say that a pen kept in the dampest and most exposed run I have are to-day looking better than any birds I possess. Frizzles are good layers, good sitters, and good mothers, and what more can a fancier require from his pets? In conclusion, I have pleasure to give my standard of excellence in a Frizzle Bantam, and hope that my short article on this variety may help to make the Year Book the best yet issued.

Shieh, the Chicken and the Rabbi

A Sabbath Eve Dinner in the Ghetto in Peril

(From the New York Sun.)

Joy was in Shiek's heart as he wig-wagged himself in a rocking chair with his large feet on the table, thus looking very much a Yankee, he flattered himself. Through the open door enter ed an ambrosial kitshen smell, went right up into Shieh's nose and made him sneeze with plasurable anticipation. The sound of his own sternutation sent a huge wave of rapture from his palate via the gullet to his stomach, for he always knew that when a culinary smell made him sneezs it was sure to be really something superior.

On the other side of the table, against the wall, stood a long looking glass in which Shieh saw reflected his wife, Bela, cooking and baking for the Sabbath eve. He experienced an accession of pious gratitude to the Lord of Israel, who had ordained that on the seventh day no Jew shall work, but shall feast and be happy. In this religious mood he meditated on the fleeting vanities of this life and on the substantial delights of grilled chicken.

A rasping cry from his wife, Bela, cruelly broke up his contented repose.

"Ah's me! Woe's me! The chicken's got a pin in its belly. I'm afeared the chicken isn't kosher."

Shieh leaped up with a white face.

"Ha! What's that? What's wrong with tha chicken?"

"Didn't I say what's wrong?" Ah's me, the chicken's got a pin in its belly."

"You don't say! I wish the chicken were hanged."

"Would you eat a chicken that's been hanged and that's not been slaughtered according to the law?"

"Oh, well now; so the chicken has got a pin? The wretch!" he grumbled, fingering the entrails with the mischievous pin sticking out.

The woman, with arms akimbo, glared at the pin.

"Woe betide me," she wailed; "if that chicken hasn't got a pin in its belly."

"What are you going to do about it?" demanded the husband.

"Do? Woe's my years! What shall I do? I'll go and ask the rabbi."

A cold shiver ran down Shieh's spine.

"The rabbi? What rabbi?" he asked fiercely.

"What rabbi? And wha rabbi should I go if not to Rabbi Zebulun, around the corner?"

"Don't you go to Rabbi Zebuluni!" he yelled.

Rabbi Zebulun Makepeace Garlicson, Shieh well knew, was a fussy, gray pietist, and if that pinned chicken ever came before him Shieh was sure he would remorselessly adjudge it unkosher, and there would be no ambrosial grill for Shieh that Sabbath eve.

"Lord! Lord!" complained the woman. "What am I to do with that chicken if I don't ask Rabbi Zebulun? Shall I throw it into the trash box outright? Such a fat, soft chick, too!"

"Don't throw away the chicken," he yelled desperately.

"Oh, Lord! the man's gone daft. Neither this nor that will suit him. What woul you have me do with the chicken? Pickle it?"

"Grill it."

"Grill it, quotha! and contaminate all the pots and the very grate with an unkosher chicken!"

"Bother my head! This ain't Krimitchug, my love. This is America, a free country; and I'm going to eat my chicken, which cost me good and hard earned money , in the teeth of all the rabbis in the world."

"Heretic! Blasphemer! Apostate!" voolleyed the outraged wife. "Have you thrown off the yoke of the commandments? Dark are my days that I should live with the likes of you! No, no, the merit of my blessed father will stand by me, and I'll separate from you. A divorce! A divorce! Quick! At once! Let's go to the Rabbi Zebulun, and he'll divorce us."

"The Torah forbids divorces to be given on the eve of the Sabbath."

"Then after Sabbath, on Sunday, we sepearate. No unkosher meat ever passed my lips, and never will; that's sure.

Shieh paced the kitchen reflectively. Should Bela carry out her menace he could never find such an excellent cook, and so would lose the real thing in grilled chicken for evermore, not to mention her fried fish, which was unparalleled from Houston to Madison Street, and from the Bowery to Cannon Street.

He stopped abruptly in his walk, straightened himself to his full height, stared into her eyes and said with a fine scorn in his voice:

"You moralize me? Me, who am a Talmudist and ten times more pious than you any day? Will you preach your womanish doctrine to me, who am a disciple of Rabbi Lebish, of Krisnoi, whose soul is in Eden? That's pride and vanity past understanding."

"Well," she faltered, overawed, didn't you tell me to grill the chicken, and hasn't the chicken got a pin?"

"A pin, you say? Let's see," and he took the fowl, peered at it knowingly, trenched his brows, swayed his body, whirled his thumb and began to sing in an undertone. Any Jew seeing a person stond like that he is absorbed in a Talmudio theme.

"Aha!" he soliloquized in this posture. "Aha! This chicke has evidently got a pin, and in its belly. Ain't it? Now, now,I thought at first you only let fall a drop of milk on the meat pot, and that's what you clamored about. Of course that, too, is a great sin, but I could make that all right myself, without having recourse to the good and holy Rabbi Zebulun. Now, a pin in a chicken's bely—that's anohtre thing. Did you find the pin in its belly or did the pin drop from your shirt waist on this goodly chicken?"

"No, I found the pin in the chicken while I was prepearing it.

"More and more serious! Again, what say the rabbis? If that pin had been anywhere on God's earth but in that chicken, everything would certainly be all right. Now, the question is, How can a wicked, miserable pin, that sticks in its head where it has no business to be spoil a good, good chicken? That's the problem, and I'm going to ask it of Rabbi Zebulun."

Bela, happy at the obvious erudition of her husband, wrapped up the chicken in an old number of a Jewish paper, and her husband walked out with the package under his arm.

Ascending five dark and slippery flights of stairs, Shieh found himself in the rabbinical presence. Rabbi Zebulun Makepeace Garlicson sat in a rickety armchair. Before him stretched a line of people on similar errands with Shieh's, each with a chicken or duck or goose in his hand. Behind the rabbi the wall was lined with shelves of appalingly thick and appalingly worm eaten folios.

First in this line was a wrinkled and ragged Jewess who whined:

"Take pity, O good rabbi! I bought half a chicken, and I am a poor market woman with six children, and if you say the half chicken isn't kosher, God knows when my little ones will taste again a piece of poultry."

"Well?" breathed the rabbi betwen half closed lips.

"Oh, dear rabbi, the chicken has got no gall."

"Broil the liver and bring it here," ordered the rabbi.

The next man has a duck with a broken leg. The rabbi poked and twisted the limb and sentenced the duck as unkosher. The person left with a remarkably wry face.

The next fowl had something the matter with its throat, and the rabbi slashed it with a penknife and pronounced "Kosher."

And so all through the line Shieh remarked that the rabbi regularly alternated one kosher with one unkosher.

Glancing along the diminishing file, he saw that at his turn the rabbi would say "Kosher." How good he felt!

Unluckily, just as his turn came round, the ragged market woman returned wit hthe broiled liver. Rabbi Zebulun M. Garlicson took a bite of the liver, turned the whites of his eyes up to the ceiling in manifest communion with angels and proceeded to masticate his food with a slow deliberation that might have won the approval of any hygienist.

Then he took another bite. Then another. Then still another. Then there was no more liver.

Rabbi Garlicson took up a big, smutty bandanna that had been hanging from the back of his chair, and absterged his whiskers. Presently he snorted "Kosher," and the ragged market woman went her way rejoicing, minus the liver, of course.

Coming thus after a kosher, Shieh fearfully expected an unkosher, and hence he made haste to insinuate:

"Rabbi Zebulun, I'm myself no mean Talmudist, and I know the chicken is kosher, but I just want to have your worthy opinion."

Rabbi Zebulun looked at his interlocutor's face, reached out for an immense tome entitled "The Teacher of Knowledge," opened it at random, and went through the process Shieh had executed a little while before for the benefit of his spouse, namely, he furrowed his brows, shook his body, scratched the back of his head, snapped his thumb and forefinger and singsonged nasally.

At last he delivered abstractedly this opinion:

"Not kosher, not kosher. Chicken must be thrown away.

On his way home Shieh conceived an idea.

"This chicken," he mused, "is unkosher. Be it so. Atonement Day is drawing nigh, and the Lord will forgive the chicken her pin; but is it so certain that he'd forgive me if I abstained from meat on his holy Sabbath day?

"I'll make my peace with God all right; but how make my peace with my good wife? If I come and tell her that Rabbi Garlicson said the chicken is kosher, would she believe me after what has just passed between us?"

Then it was that Shieh conceived an idea.

He came in with a religiously solemn countenance.

"My wife Bela," he addressed her in a husky voice. "Thus saith Rabbi Zebulun Makepeace Garlicson:

"The chicken is innocent. It is our sins that have placed the pin in its vitals. Therefore, said the saintly Garlicson, we shall do penance. You, my dear wife, will fast next Monday and Thursday. And I—I will say through the Psalms on a twilight hour.

"And as for the chicken, this is his inspired word:

"Tohu shalt cook it with onions and garlic, as thou knowest how. And the garlic, by cabalistic affinity with the rabbi's name, Garlicson, will avail to shield us against our transgressions.

"But, decreed the rabbi, thou shalt do that chicken well—do it well, he said, and its being eaten on Sabbath eve will place the chicken's soul in a stately chamber in paradise."

The good woman believed, and Shieh ate chicken at supper that Sabbath eve.

THE JOHNSTOWN SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

At a meeting held August 24, the following Judges were selected to place the awards at the next annual show of the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock Club to be held at Johnstown, N. Y., December 11 to 14: J. H. Drevenstedt, F. B. Zimmer, D. A. Nichols, and H. J. Quilhot. A guarantee fund has been started and a great list of specials are promised. The Empire Cooping Company will furnish the coops and do the feeding. It is expected that the comink show will equal if not surpass, the shows of the past that have made Johnstown famous.

B. W. MOSHER, Sec'y.

A1 In Advertising.

Editor American Fancier:

Sorry we did not get in with the bunch earlier in the season, but our brief experience proves to us that your paper A1 in advertising.

E. S. FREEMAN,
Manager Universal Regulator Co.

The fancier delights to be with his fowls and in caring for them. The owner bestows many little attentions which the attendent neglects. The latter goes through his daily routene in a machine like way, while the former finds pleasure in it.

This also might be one of the reasons why a bird will be raised ever and anon, which cannot be duplicated with money.

There is alse the commercial side to be looked at, perhaps the enthusiasm and care bestowed upon the flock is tempered somewhat by the balance sheet. If it shows a profit the enthusiasm is boundless, if a deficiency the depression is equally as great.

It takes a pretty good producing flock to pay a profit every month in the year. It can't be done only by raising enough young stock to sell during the short-egg months now coming on.

It might be a good feature if some hard working and successful poultryman would give us an account of his operations each month, what he paid out for feed and what he received for his eggs and stock, both for breeding and market purposes, it might act as a stimulant on the rest of us to try and do equally as well.

I notice by reports from an address by Wm. McNeil, the morning mash is not entirely without friends, the whole thing in a nutshell is this, if you want to grow a full feather bird to show or will stand cold in winter and lay as well, feed a mash. If you wish a short hard feather, feed a grain ration entirely. Different feeders have different methods, always have, follow the successful one, of which there is none more so than the authority quoted above.

The sparing and careful feeder as well as the stingy one, are not numbered with the highly successful, as I have said before, why should we look to our cattle, which are approaching market condition to produce the most milk, to our fat sleek horses to do the hardest work, and then expect the poor scrawny hens to lay the most eggs?

Impossible, a hen cannot lay an egg every day on air, she must have something to put in that egg shell.

I contend 300 head of poultry will easily consume 48 qts. of feed a day besides the odds and ends in the shape of green food and other extra bits dependable upon the ambition of the feeder.

This is a fraction less than a quart to six hens, this amount will be eaten clean in two feeds a day and the flock be they Leghorns or Langshans, kept in an energetic and productive condition.

I do not believe twice a day often enough to visit a flock, however, there is always an unlatched gate or overturned nest that needs attention, and on these trips take along a morsel of green food or some other little thing the fowls will relish. They learn your ways and become companionable so to speak.

Be absent for a week and note what happens on your return. I have just returned from such a trip and some such experience awaited me, a certain air of neglect seemed to pervade the whole place and even the calf, which furnishes the motive power for cutting green bone seemed anxious to get to work again.

It is remarkable the different class shown by the stock of different breeders the birds fortell the disposition of the handler. It is a grand sight to see a string of birds shown in perfect condition, the white birds like snow and the parte-colored ones bright and glossy, all bespeaking perfect health by blood red furnishings.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts 9,029 cases. Buyers were in search of fine fresh eggs again today, and the market had a very firm tone. Official quotations were not changed, but from store receivers were able to get a little more money. For the finest candled and graded eggs 22@22½c was current, and more could have been sold than arrived. For the finest regular packed graded eggs 21@21½c was obtained without difficulty, and qualities from 18@20c moved out pretty well. There are still some lots from the southerly sections that are losing heavily in bad eggs, and these have to be closed out at 17c or less.

ORANGE COUNTY FAIR.

The poultry show at the Orange County Fair, held Aug. 28-31, and confined to this immediate section of New York State, was excellent in the general quality, but fewer in number, than in former years.

The features were the magnificient string from Rock Hill Poultry farm, under the supervision of F. W. Cory. The fine display of Barred Rocks by Pine Top Farm, John Arfinan and F. S. Nicholson, Geo. Howells Silver Wyandottes, and a protege of Zims in Pyle and Polish Bantams, A. J. Boyce by name, a most zealous little Miss of ten summers, who stuck to the judge like a plaster until her birds were reached. Morris Davenport placed the winners in his usual felicitous and painstaking manner. The awards follows:

LIGHT BRAHMAS.—G. E. Howell, pen 1, pr. 1 chicks; E. L. Tallman, pen 1, pr. 1, fowls; W. D. Minturn, pr. 2 fowls.

DARK BRAHMAS.—D. C. Noxon, pen 1, fowls; Minturn Pair 1 fowls, Pair 1 chicks; Tallman pair 2 fowls.

Mr. M. P. Wemple, manager of the Empire Cooping Company, Fultonville, N. Y., started on his annual fall circuit last week, beginning with Taunton, Mass., then to Wilmington, Delaware, and from there to White Plains, N. Y. Empire Coops will be used at all the above shows and many others later in the season. The above firm has received many orders for new coops for agriculture fairs and winter shows and for private plants, in fact its business is the largest in the history of the concerns, and not only testifies as to the merit of the goods manufactured by it, but to the wonderful growth of the poultry business as well. Hundreds of exhibition houses for preparing choice birds for the show room are now equipped with Empire Coops.

There will be a show at Johnstown, New York, this winter. The dates are December 11 to 14. This will be good news to real fanciers for a Johnstown show is a winner always. As the late John Glasgow was wont to remark: "The fanciers show of America is Johnstown." Readers of the American Fancier of years past well recollect the great exhibitions held in that Adirondack city. Many of the best breeders and fanciers in the east and south attended these shows and the banquets. The old guard is still in charge, and coming show will be conducted on the same liberal and progressive lines as the ones that are important history in show annals.

The fall fair shows that exact a dollar entry fee per bird are noticeable this year. Trenton, N. J., and White Plains, N. Y. These two are the pioneers of the new order of things at strictly up-to-date early shows. It means that fanciers are beginning to exert their influence for elevation of the shows held at summer and autumn fairs and bring them up to the level of the heat conducted winter shows. We say best, because there are a lot of winter shows just as badly conducted as some of the exhibitions at county fairs. Unless a poultry show is properly classified and equipped with uniform coops, it is not worthy of being classed as a modern exhibition.

The premium list of America's great fall show, Hagerstown, Md., is out. It bears the stamp of liberality and magnitude. Nine Judges are engaged to award the premiums, and every one of them has either judged there before, or is well known as a competent man for the job. The prizes are $3.00 to first and $2.00 to second on single birds. On exhibition pens the prizes are $5.00 to first and $3.00 to second. The entry fees are 50 cents on single birds and $2.50 on breeding pens. The premiums are awarded on Standard varieties only. On all non-standard varieties the premiums offered are fifty cents to first and twenty-five cents to second. This will cut down the mushroom new (?) sports of established varieties to a minimum. Entries close positively October 4th, so send in early as possible, as there will be many big strings entered, and the wise exhibitor will take no chances in getting left out by delaying his entries. The poultry buildings at Hagerstown occupy 17,000 square feet, the coops being double tiered. This gives a good idea of the immensity of the show.

The A. P. A. has no fall show junketing trip on tap this fall. It was a good thing to cut out such annual fiascos.

The proposed annual meeting of the American Poultry Association to be held in August looks all right, and seem in line with other reforms recommended by the committee of fourteen at their nine days' session in Mt. Clemens last month. Of course some will object to the month selected, believing earlier in the summer to be more suitable. As this is a matter of personal opinion, it will no doubt, be thoroughly discussed at the annual meeting next January.

Mr. Fred L. Kimmey, of Chicago, Ill., is the perennial chairman of American Poultry Association committees. It's a mighty cold day when a picture of one of the "coms" appears in print, that Mr. Kemmey is not in the limelight and holds the center of the stage. We must not lose sight of the two Orrs either. Both "Tom" of Pennsylvania, and "Link" of New York, manage to get on these pictures in characteristic poses. And there are a few others. It's all for the good of the cause and helps the photographer also.

Some fellows are beginning to howl over the proposed fifteen hundred dollar salary to be paid annually to the secretary of the American Poultry Association. They think it too much and claim the latter can't afford it. As a versatile brother editor, claims the A. P. A. to be worth forty-thousand dollars, we see no reason why it cannot afford to pay fifteen hundred dollars a year, especially with a big sale of standard each year, on which there is a very handsome profit. A secretary that will stay at home and do all the work he should for the A. P. A. can earn his salary and not be overpaid at that.

The Canadian Exposition at Toronto, closed this week with the largest and most successful exhibition in its history. The crowds were enormous, the weather beautiful and the attractions such as only Toronto is able to afford. It is a positive delight to visit the fair grounds, and view the splendid buildings and their contents. Nearly all of the latter are permanent fixtures, being built of brick and stone, the architecture being in keeping with the artistic sense displayed in laying out the grounds in park-like style. Every comfort for the visiting public is provided and the absence of objectionable features is very gratifying. There is so much healthy, clean amusement, excellent music by some of the best bands in England, Canada and the United States, and such a grand array of choice horses, cattle, in fact all kinds of live stock that days can be spent at this show, studying the exhibits and being royally intertained as well.

The poultry, pigeon and pet stock building, large as it is, has outgrown its usefulness, and we hear will be replaced by a new and larger one another year. It was necessary to use three tiers with a number of varieties which spoiled the effect intended, and made the judging and viewing of the birds not as satisfactory as the management desired, but there was no help for it. The entries in the poultry department exceeding those of last year by three hundred, making a total of 2,200 single entries of birds; pigeons were increased by over two hundred, making a total of over nine hundred. Canaries numbered 275, a gain of one hundred. There were 220 turkeys, ducks and geese exhibited. The largest class was the White Wyandotte, numbering 159 single entries. Barred Rocks came next with 130 entries, while Buff Orpingtons were close up. As about every bird in the show was as fit as the season allowed, the majority were up to the winter show standard. Poorly conditioned birds stand no chance of winning a prize at Toronto.

The birds were ready for the judges at eight o'clock Saturday morning, thanks to the efforts and hard work of Messrs. Grimsley, Baker, Wagner and exhibitors. The classification was very good, as can always be expected at this show. It was, however, impossible to get the birds all judged in the time allowed, viz., five hours. A decrease in the force of judges and increase in the number of entries caused the judging to drag along until five p. m., when about every class was finished, and all cards and ribbons were up. The anxious exhibitors and waiting public were then admitted to the building, and it took but a few minutes to fill the aisles to the limit, making further attempt to judge or handle the birds a physical impossibility. The interest taken in fowls and pigeons at this Canadian fair is remarkable in its intensity. Talk about strenuous chicken raisers, they certainly exist in that neck of the woods.

There was quite a change in the list of judges and, we believe, a mistake was made in cutting down the list as the amount of work allotted to some judges in consequence thereof, is far greater than the time limit allows. We further think it was a mistake to leave the veteran Sharp Butterfield off the list. He has been identified with the Toronto Exposition since its inception many years ago, and as Editor Donovan of the Canadian Poultry Review remarked: "A Toronto show without Butterfield is like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. His classes were divided among the other judges. George H. Burgott was also among the absentees, and was greatly missed by the Leghorn fanciers, as George has many friends in Ontario. His classes were entrusted to able hands in Mr. Jarvis. Geo. H. Northup, who handled and judged Black Minorcas with much success here was not re-engaged, Mr. Sinelt taking his classes. Senator A. F. Pierce, who was expected to judge Games and Game Bantams, sent word he could not come owing to his having a big herd of Jerseys on the circuit, gathering blue ribbons and dollars. Eugene Sites was sent for and took not only Mr. Pierce's classes, but the Ornamental Bantams as well, and handled his job like a veteran. Richard Oke, the most even tempered fancier on earth, thanks to Prof. McNeil's tutelage, had plenty to do judging Orpingtons and Osialics, but Sir Richard is always equal to the task, doing his work conscientiously and fearlessly. The writer of these notes had all the Wyandotte classes with the Dorkings and French varieties as good measure. Nothwithstanding the large classes and short time limit, the judges fared well in having excellent clerks, good light and proper classification to assist them in their work.

The largest classes were the White Wyandottes and, we believe, the quality to be the best as a whole ever shown at Toronto. When about one hundred and sixty White Wyandottes confront a judge, there is something to do in selecting the five winners in each class, especially when the quality is uniformly good in each. Space forbids going into detailed descriptions of the winners, but a few remarks regarding the latter may prove of interest to lovers of the White Wyandotte. The string shown by Mr. John S. Martin was a fine study of type. As he won all firsts, except cockerel, a glance at his winners demonstrated the breeding qualities of the strain established by him. The old cock who won the blue, showed fine type and sound color, other old birds of same exhibitor being very similar, one in particular, a rare old fellow in heavy moult, indicating unusually fine points in shape, style and plumage. The same might be said of hens. They looked as if cut out of the same mould. Cockerels and pullets reflected sires and dams. One reason for Mr. Martin's success in breeding birds of a uniform type was aptly illustrated by the laconic remark of a fancier in answer to a question how Martin got such birds: "Johnny breeds 'em and don't buy 'em." But there were other beautiful birds in those classes that indicated careful breeding. The first prize cockerel was a grand fellow, nicely turned in every section, strong in limb, standing well apart on his legs, plenty of good curved lines in his make up, very good head and neat low comb, pure white plumage. This bird should keep growing into value. He was by no means at his best at Toronto, even if he was best bird there, in his class.

Buff Wyandottes, fine classes, but some of the most promising birds, notably cockerels, were too young to show off to good advantage. First and second prize pullets were a splendid pair of large, well grown birds, very even and sound in color; third and fourth smaller, but fine in color, with some not in the money, that will make good later on. Silver Wyandottes were represented by a single cock and hen, both being excellent in quality. Silvers need stirring up in Canada and no mistake. There were some great exhibits at Toronto years ago, but the newer varieties seem to have temporarily pushed the silvers aside. The same can be said of the Goldens, only a few entries being shown. There was a fine collection of Blacks and large and meriterious classes of Partridge Wyandottes, first hen in latter being a beautiful bird in type, color and pencilling. Silver Penciled and Columbian competed together, both varieties being above the average in quality. But it was a mistake not to provide separate classes for each.

Dorkings, as far as Silver Grays were concerned, made a strong showing, the quality being very good in all classes. There was but a small class of Colored Dorkings, while White Dorkings were conspicuous by their absence. French classes were lighter than usual, especially Houdans, which usually come out strong at Toronto. The quality in some of the individual winners was good. La Fleche and Creve-Coeurs both fine in quality, but not every strong in number.

Plymouth Rocks made up a fine showing and "Joe" Bennett, the judge, was kept busy getting the awards up. He will send his report in shortly and tell in his own way what he saw in Rock alley. Other reports will follow with awards for early publication in the American Fancier.

The social side of the Toronto show was the same as ever. There was plenty of good fellowship and the evenings were spent in enjoying chicken talks and good natured bantering among the boys. We enjoyed a very pleasant Saturday night with Grandpa McNeil in a room at the hotel, when he gathered in a fine bunch of fanciers to make the hours pass away only too swiftly. "Dick" Oke acted as master of ceremonies, a game he acknowledges no superior at. Newton Cosh was an able assistant and helped make everybody comfortable. Martin, Minshall, Jarvis, McCormack, "Jack" Saunders and a few others were there whose names we have forgotten, all had their innings and the fun was such as only thoroughbred chicken fanciers can enjoy. Last, but not least, was "Joe" Bennett, who is a whole circus by himself, Joe's descriptions of judging in far north are worth listening to, especially the language he uses. It is an original brand of his own. It is just such gatherings that bring out all the good there is in men, and many an enjoyable hour is spent, and we might add most profitably as well. For even in jest, much sound poultry love is kept on tap. Of course it takes that prince of managers, "Billy" McNeil to keep the boys in line as well as in good humor. There was one great cause of regret, however, and that was the absence of Dr. A. W. Bell, the able superintendent at former poultry and gernel shows. The Doctor has gone to Manitoba where he holds the reins over the great exposition held there each year. His old friends missed him very much and to show their appreciation of him as a man and executive officer, subscribed a substantial amount for a suitable gift to be presented to him. The sentiments of "Bobby" Burns' Auld Lang Syne are pretty firmly entrenched in the hearts of our Canadian fanciers.

Hens Taken Under Roosevelt's Wing.

Washington, Aug. 30.—The American hen is to be given a course in the Luther Burbank finishing school. The Department of Agriculture proposes to take her in hand and train her to lay more frequently and cheerfully, and especially to induce her to lay at least once a day in cold weather. It is found that the besetting sin of the hen is wanting to set. If it wasn't for the distraction of this strange ambition, she would be much more useful. So it is proposed, if possible, to develop a hen that will not want to set, but that will lay all the time, Sundays, of course, excepted.

To this end Secretary Wilson has established under the Bureau of Animal Industry a hen department, in charge of Robert R. Slocum, a hen expert. Mr. Slocum will establish a hen farm near Baltimore, where colonies of hens will be handled by various processes, and a scientific diet and course of treatment worked out. Secretary Wilson explains that the hen produces more annual wealth than the gold and silver mines together, and is entitled to some attention.—New York American.

The Only Paper to Advertise In.

To The American Fancier:

The American Fancier is the ONLY paper to advertise in. It has sold me birds and eggs over fourteen hundred dollars worth. The only reason I stopped my advertisement was that it was selling me out too fast. Have shipped eggs to every State in the Union; also, several lots to Canada. Wishing you success, and long life to the eagle, I am,

Most truly yours,
CHAS. H. BRUNDAGE.

Seems Good to Him.

To The American Fancier:

It seems good to get the Fancier in the good old way, and there is but one "American Fancier," and that is when "Drev" is the Editor. We hope that all the cranks in hendom will do their little bit to push a good thing along.

Yours truly,

COLORED PLATES.

The first of a series of colored plates to be issued by The American Fancier appeared as a Supplement to the latter with the September first issue. This handsome picture was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the famous and widely advertised "$750 Buff Plymouth Rock Cock," winner of the One Hundred Dollar Sweepstakes as cockerel in 1905 and as cock in 1906, at the Boston show. It represents the bird as he looked last May and many who have seen this grand specimen in life will easily recognize him in the picture. Copies of this fine colored plate, suitable for framing will be sent on receipt of ten cents from the office at the American Fancier.

What $1.00 Will Do

During the Months of September, October, November and December the Following Special Clubbing Offer Will be in Effect:

CAN THE AMERICAN POULTRY ASSOCIATION INCORPORATE?

Theodore Hewes in the August Inland Poultry Journal gives the following editorial prominence:

For several years there has been a demand on the officers of the American Poultry Association for a permanent home where the Association could incorporate and have some legal standing. Some were slow to join the Association until such action should be taken and define the responsibility of its members.

Motions have been made and committees appointed with instructions to make the necessary arrangements, but like most committees selected to do something after an annual meeting adjourned, nothing was done. It is only within the past year that the members became alive and made what might be termed a real effort to do something along this line. It looked easy on the surface, and no doubt was entertained by the members that we would have any trouble in this direction if the proper steps were taken. But we find a peculiar condition confronting us and for the present at least we are able to give the members any assurance that we can incorporate in any of the several States where we have made inquiry. The report of Mr. Baerman, Kimmey and Crawford herewith attached shows what these men think of the situation as it stands now and it is well to consider that at elast two of this committee are lawyers and are perhaps the best informed on legal matters of any in our Association. We are not ready to lay down yet and say we are whipped and we hope to be able to make a more satisfactory report at Auburn.

Following is the report of this committee:

Report of Sub-Committee on Incorporation.

To the Committee of Fourteen of the A. P. A.:

Gentlemen: Your Committee having considered the subject of incorporation, pursuant to the authority delegated to it, herewith sumits conclusions formulated by Mr. F. D. Baerman, of this Committee; as embracing its conclusions based upon the authorities submitted by Mr. Baerman, to-wit:

(1). An unincorporated Association cannot be incorporated so as to dissolve the Association and transfer its property and rights to the new corporation without the unanimous consent of its members, no mer majority having the right to wrok such dissolution and incorporate.

(See 25 Am. and Eng. Ency., p. 1.-142; 4 Cyc., p. 315; and cases there cited.)

The Association cannot be deprived of its right to the name by which it has been known, excepting upon the same unanimous consent, and a court of equity will restrain the use of such name without such consent.

(See Niblack on Voluntary Associations (Ed. 1904), p. 186; 4 Cyc., p. 304.)

(2) Upon incorporating, if it were possible to secure the necessary consent of the members, it would be difficult to keep out undesirable members and after their admission practically impossible to expel members; whereas in the unincorporated association the association is the absolute judge of the qualifications of members and may provide in the constitution for expulsion of any member for any cause that may be stated therein, or in any manner therein provided.

One authority holds that a member of a corporation who has a pecuinary interest in the corporation may not be expelled except for some heinous offense, making him unfit for the society of honest men, and that even then he must first have been convicted by the law of the land.

(See Niblack, supra, p. 81.)

(Also, on the general subject of expulsion, 4 Cyc., 302.)

(3) The utter confusion prevailing among the various State laws regarding corporations makes it almost impossible to know what rules to follow in the various jurisdictions; whereas the unincorporated society is usually amenable in each jurisdictions alike to the usual rules of business customs, and can invoke the same for its protection.

On this subject of confusion of State laws regarding corporations the committee refers to a pamphlet by Prof. Horace L. Wilgus, of the University of Michigan, entitled "National Incorporation Law," published in the Michigan Law Review, issues of February and April, 1904, Vol. 2, pp. 305, 501, where the matter is fully discussed; and also to the address by Mr. James B. Dill on "National Incorporation Law," published in pamphlet form by the "Registration and Trust Company, of New York.'

(4) After incorporation obligations would increase in many ways. For one thing, an office must be kept in each State where business is done; and in most States the privilege of doing business must be paid for; and if the laws of a State are not followed that State sometimes holds members as partners, who will have to answer for the acts of corporation officers, having much greater latitude in incurring liabilities than officers of an unincorporated society.

(5) Where the State under which incorporation was secured gives the right to vote by proxy and to transfer stock no rule of the Association can intervene to prevent these practices.

(6) All the troubles of being driven into the hands of a receiver, and many other inconveniences, are practically inoperative in the unincorporated society.

(7) If members are desirous of limiting personal liability, which is sometimes incurred in unincorporated associations, that might be done, to some extent, by constitutional provisions prescribing such liability, both of officers and members; and providing for reimbursement of those members who have suffered any loss on account of the society.

(8) It is not necessary to incorporate for the purpose of holding property, real or personal. Even realty can be held in joint ownership by the members, or trustees in their behalf. These trustees may even receive gifts and legacies for the use and benefit of the Association.

Some States, notably, without capital stock, of corporations "not for pecuniary profit," and incorporation under such a statute would seem to obviate the objections above set out in the matter of expelling undesirable members; yet, at the best, such a corporation would be restricted in its activities, and perhaps in transactions in other States the members would be held individually liable to as great an extent as in the present organization. Furthermore, even in Michigan, a "poultry and pet stock" corporation must have a capital stock of a par value of not less than $25 per share, making it apparent that the expression "for pecuniary profit" has a very limited application. Also, it is to be noted that a corporation organized under this act dies by ilmitation in thirty years.

Because of the foregoing considerations, and in the belief that the purposes and objects of the American Poultry Association can best be carried out by the unincorporated society, your committee is compelled to report adversely on the advisability of incorporating under existing laws.

Respectfully submitted,

F. D. Baerman,
Fred. L. Kimmey,
H. V. Crawford,
Special Committee.

SILVER PENCILED HAMBURGHS.

By the Rev. C. D. Farrar.

(Concluded.)

In keeping a pen of silver pencils it is always a wise precaution to put them into a wired-over run, and then you are sure of them. They are very nervous birds, and can fly like pheasants; and should anything happen to startle them, they will make nothing of taking over a couple of fields, hedges and all, without alighting—and one might just as well chase the wind as try to catch them!

A writer in a contemporary—who should know better, if age can teach—has of late been advocating big silver pencils. How he purposes to get size, and, at the same time retain the perfect markings, he discreetly keeps to himself. To get great coarse birds would be easy enough, but what would be gained by having a bird as big as a Wyandotte in place of the lovely silver penciled Hamburgh? Again, who wants these big birds? Certainly no breeder of repute. As dear old Harry Pickles used to say to me, "They can write what they have a mind, Mr. Farrar, but it's all 'nowt.' We know better." "Little and good" is certainly true of silver pencils; not that I allow for a moment they are little. They are just the right size, and could not be improved, though they could very easily be spoilt if this modern writer had his way.

In breeding cockerels, it is a case, as it is so often elsewhere, of cherchez la femme, and right good cocking hens are no so easy to light on. Always try if you can to get birds related to your cockerels. I know you will hear a lot about relationship and in-breeding—never mind, do as I advise and you will never repent.

The silver pencil cock-breeding hens are "sweetly pretty" birds, as young ladies say. The body color is of pure and snowy white, including the neck-hackle and breast and thighs; the rest of the body is black, and the tail is black, as also are the wing-flights. The combs of the pullets are generally very neat and good; the face should be cherry red; and the ears smooth, round, and white, and about as large as a threepenny-piece. The legs are blue.

In a breeding-pen I would allow about four or five hens to a cockerel if you can afford them, as they are rather a little bird; if you cannot afford them, put in three common hens that lay brown eggs, and so save the plumage of the pencilled pullets. Silver pencil hens are the most wonderful layers in the world. They used to be called "Dutch everlasting layers," and they well deserve their name, for I believe they lay every day for certain, and sometimes by mistake twice. The only fault they have is they are persistent scratchers, and unless they have a big grass run they will soon reduce it to a bare dull brown patch, pitted all over with little holes.

There must be a good high fence between their run and the next, or the pencil cock will spend his day leaping up and down to get at his neighbor; and though he may not be able to do him much harm, he can very easily get himself hung up in the wire, and tear off a spur or a claw. By the way, silver pencil cockerels often grow very large and sharp spurs, and these must be cut off to save the hens much suffering. It is quite simple; heat the poker red hot, then catch your cock, take him into the kitchen, remove the spur with a sharp saw, and then just touch the severed end with the red hot iron to stop the bleeding, and he will be running about in a minute as though nothing had happened.

There are few birds more full of interest than silver pencil cockerels, as the moment they begin to get their proper tail they improve day by day, and every morning seems to bring forth some new beauty, until at last the long tail is all there, and the beautiful Palace winner stands before you in all his matchless glory.—From Poultry, England.

FEEDING SUGAR TO POULTRY AND FARM ANIMALS.

By. W. W. Page.

This is a practice as old as the hills and the name of the man who is responsible for it has been forgotten for centuries. The instincts of animals, however, remain for ages, and the same motive that prompts animals to travel for miles to obtain salt from some available lick is alive in them to-day. Many of the plants on which wild animals graze have a small quantity of sugar in them, and in this manner they obtain the small amount necessary to satisfy their needs. Our domestic animals, not being allowed to seek the sugar-bearing plants, are obliged to go without it, except when some one playfully offers them a bit. You have doubtless noticed how greedily horses eat it; they will follow one about hoping to get enough to satisfy their craving. This action in time attracted the attention of some scientific fellow, who fed sugar to his poultry and farm animals and noted results. He got the results but could not stand the expense, he substituted molasses, found it answered as well as sugar and was cheaper. From that time on the feeding of sugar was taken up and many have written much much on the subject. Some years ago the idea was conceived of compounding a balanced rations of grains and molasses, but experiments finally convinced that the same could neith be sent out ready mixed with the ra.. molasses, nor use artificial heat to dry it. Continued research, however, finally developed a process of turnig the molasses into sugar in a granulator dry meal form—that was a new one, and the process was patented. This done, the rest was easy and today there are thousands and thousands of tons of Dairy, Horse and Poultry Feeds being used with great profit to the feeders. The value of sugar in a Dairy Feed has been advertised and brought before the notice of the public more extensively in the past few years than that of Poultry Food. This does not, however, in any way reflect on the value of this ingredient for chickens, as experiments have already shown that sugar in the proper form when mixed with a perfect balance of other grains of known value, is a great saving for the poultryman as well as increasing the profits. It isc a wonderful egg producer and builder of bone, flesh and feathers. Another importane feature of sugar feeding is the flavor of meat which it imparts to the flesh of the bird, making a rich juicy meat which demands a premium price on any fair market. Extensive experiments have been made with a feed of this nature for ducks and turkeys. On the duck farm the birds are ready for market in from ten to eleven weeks after leaving the shell, and as the cost of the feed is no greater than other rations used, a great saving is readily recognized. The molasses or sugar ras 80 per cent. of the nutritive value of corn, but is far more valuable as a food stuff owing to its effect on the system of the bird fed. It aids in the digestion and assimilation of all the feed eaten during the day and keeps the fowl in a healthy condition, avoiding the necessity of using condition powders and medicated condiments of the one hundred and one varieties in vogue. Within the next twelve months it is conservative to say that the poultryman who is in business for profit will find, after making a test for himself, that the proper amount of sugar in the feed for his poultry will be the source of greatly increased profits and healthier fowls.

THE MODERN TURBIT.

In a very interesting article on the points of the present day Turbit, Mr. H. P. Scatliff in the Feathered World writes as follows: Sir.—I was of opinion at the time (and still am) that ten points are too many to allot to this point, and think that half that number would be all we could spare out of our possible hundred; and unless the bird be out of all proportion as regards size, its merely being somewhat large should not—and I think in judging does not—cause it to lose one-tenth of the whole points. But as this paragraph also includes shortness in feather and carriage of flights, it is of considerable importance. It will be noticed, if the comparison be made with first standard (of 1882 given before), that the words "cobby" and "with upright carriage" have been introduced, which certainly is an improvement.

Head, Beak, Beak, Setting, Sweep, and Wattle.—The head should be distinctly "large" for the size of the bird, and also should be "wide," but not, as some fanciers would have it, as wide as possible; mere width of skull is somewhat easy to produce in itself, but the head can be too wide. The modern Turbit has to have a full frontal when looked at from the front, and it is next to impossible to get the very wide-headed birds perfectly full over the beak wattle; consequently I would prefer a moderately wide head with full frontal rather than one extra wide in head with the same amount of front, which would appear somewhat pinched. Do not let my readers suppose I want to see a narrow head—far from it—but I think it a mistake to place too much value upon mere width of skull. Let us have the "happy medium." Having obtained the desired point, looking from the front, the bird must also be well bulged in front of the head when looked at from the side, and if a perpendicular line were drawn in front of the bird's head I should like to see the frontal just above the wattle be the part to touch same, and not the beak, as is usually the case, except in that of the birds possessing perfect frontal bulge; but in the best birds of the day the point of contact would probably be the wattle. It follows, therefore, if this frontal (the production of which is the greatest sign of the "modern Turbit" breeder's art) is correct when viewed from the front and the side of the head, the mouth must be wide in gape, as it is desired it should be.

The skull cheeks mentioned in the standard are a valuable property, but are not difficult to obtain, as they more or less follow the frontal bulge, and need not be specially bred for.

The beak in the modern Turbit cannot properly be valued except in its conjunction with the head and profile, and it is for this reason I have "humped" the second, third, fourth, and seventh points as described in the standard together.

It is paramount in the modern Turbit that the beak should be properly "set," i.e., that the top of its upper mandible should (when viewed from the side) continue the curve of the frontal. This point can be obtained in perfection, consequently I am prepared to say that unless a Turbit has a perfect profile it should not win under a specialist judge of the variety. A bird with a broken profile (i.e., its beaking standing out and breaking the continuance of the sweep) may possibly be a good stock bird—I say "may," as it entirely depends from what stock it is produced—but be that as it may, its place is certainly not in the show pen at any of our "classic fixtures," and to me it is an eyesore. I would rather possess a bird somewhat lacking in substance of beak, providing it be of the correct shape and properly set, than the stoutest-beaked bird living if its beak poked out of its head and spoilt the whole of its quality.

The beak in the modern Turbit is, or at least should be, set right in its head, and when the mouth is opened formed in an apple by cutting a triangular piece out with a knife towards the centre. The upper mandible being a "fixture," this point can only be obtained by breeding it, and therefore a correctly-set beak chiefly means a correctly-set upper mandible. There should be a distinct curve in the profile of the upper mandible, and the more this line curves towards the gullet the better, but the mandible must not be "hooby" or overlap the lower to any extent.

The revised standard and, in fact, all the standards say "slightly overlapping at the tip," and as what is meant is that this "overlapping" is of the very slightest possible description, I think it would have been almost as well if no reference had been made to it at all. I have said that there should be a distinct curve in the profile of the upper mandible, but the beak should not be curved in the "mouth line," if I may so term it, and the mandibles should fit closely; but the lightest possible opening caused by the downward curve in the upper and the upper curve in the lower mandible is not considered a very grave fault, but more than this is not permissible.

There is considerable difficulty still (as Mr. Coombe-Williams said was the case in the early "nineties") in producing the lower mandible of equal thickness with the upper. The latter is generally considerably the thicker of the two, but it is desirable to have them of equal stoutness, and the stouter the better.

The English Turbit Club's Revised Standard of Excellence.

	Pts.
A Size.—Small, compact, and cobby, very full in breast, with upright carriage, short in flights and tail, the former carried well up, and not drooping	10
B. Head.—Large and wide, not long, forehead moderately high and round, with well-bulged and full frontal, wide in gape, and full cheeks	10
C. Beak.—Short, thick, and wide, both mandibles as stout as possible, fitting closely together, the lower forming a strong support, the upper slightly overlapping at the tip	10
D. Beak, Setting and Sweep.—The top of upper mandible to form part of an unbroken sweep of profile, commencing at its tip and continued to back of skull, there turning upwards and terminating in a needle-pointed peak	15
E. Peak and Mane.—Peak springing from an unbroken mane and ending in a fine point above the head, the mane to be central and knife-like, commencing well down in shoulders, and continued in a perfectly straight line (when viewed from the back) upwards, and to add with gullet to width of neck	8
F. Gullet.—As much as possible, quite filling up the hollow in the throat	8
G. Wattle.—Smooth in texture, fitting close and even, and only a sufficient quantity to leave no ridge or break in outline	5
H. Eye.—Bull, i.e., dark hazel, large and bolting, with flesh-coloured eye ceres, free from redness, fine in texture	5
I. Frill.—As much as possible, long in feather and firm in texture, turning both ways, and extending from gullet well down into breast	6
K. Colour.—Black, red, yellow, blue, silver, rich, sound and lustrous, the bars of blue to be black, and of silver as dark as possible, broad, even and distinct	10
L. Markings.—White with coloured wing coverts, each wing having ten white primary flight feathers	10
M. Legs.—Short and free from feathers below the hocks	3

AMERICAN ANGORA GOAT BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION.

Owners of Angora goats who contemplate exhibiting their animals at any of the Fairs this fall, will be interested to know that the American Angora Goat Breeders' Association offers a special award to the successful exhibitor of the best group or flock of Angora goats exhibited at any of the State, County and other fairs.

The American Angora Goat Breeders' Association was organized in 1900 and maintains the only record of thoroughbred Angora goats in America. It is the national organization representing and championing this breed of live stock in the United States. It has 600 members, representing nearly every state and territory, and has over 58,000 animals recorded on its Pedigree Register.

It is the purpose of the Association to encourage the breeding of Angora Goats, to improve and perfect the breed and to protect and promote the interests of this breed of live stock.

The association obtains and diffuses information regarding the history, character, care and raising of Angora Goats; it holds a national competitive exhibit of animals annually at Kansas City, at which liberal premiums are provided and, also, patronizes and supports other Angora Goat exhibits throughout the country to the encourgement and benefit of the Angora Goat Breeders of the United States. The headquarters of the association are at Kansas City, Missouri, though the resident office of the secretary, John W. Fulton, is a Helena, Montana.

Many inquiries concerning Angora husbandry are reported as having been received at the office of the association from this State, which has led to the conclusion that the subject is one of considerable interest here, and especially so among owners of waste brushy land as Angora Goats, due to being natural browsers, are very successful in clearing and reclaiming such tracts. The poorer pastures and range lands—inexpensive locations—are well adapted to Angora Goat raising and for this reason Angoras are quite aptly styled "The Poor Man's Friend."

Much interesting literature on Angora husbandry is now available. A list of the various publications and free bulletins on this subject may be had by addressing the secretary of the association.

Standby for Years.

To The American Fancier:

We are more than pleased to see the old American Fancier by itself again. It has been our standby for years. It is the one that heads the line, favoring neither friend or foe, and when it comes to show reports, you have the whole thing, not "our patrons winning:" such reports are like reading a prospectus instead of the book, and, again, the news is fresh, brief and to the point. Long may her eagle live to scream.

Yours truly,

W. E. SAMSON.

Forest City, Pa., May 14, 1906.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS AND ADVERTISERS.

Owing to the increasing circulation of The American Fancier, together with a corresponding demand upon our advertising columns, correspondents and advertisers are notified that all communications should reach the office of The American Fancier, Ossining, N. Y., or Havemeyer Building, No. 26 Cortlandt Street, New York City, before 4:30 o'clock P. M., on Monday of each week, in order to secure insertion in the current issue of the paper.

Mr. Crabtru states that Pigeons have been domesticated for nearly 5,000 years, and during that length of time numbers of varieties have occurred, which have been in turn enlarged upon, until, eventually, the innovations have become established. More is known of the history of the Pigeon than of any other domestic animal. Some breeds have hardly varied since they were propogated, and some have slowly and steadily modified.

It is interesting to know Short Faced Tumblers and Trumpeters were characterized in 1735. Nuns, Runts, Barbs, Jacobins, Tumblers and Pouters in 1600. Turbits 1677, Fantails 1605 in India. The ancient carrier approached the Bart in character, but in 1677 the Carrier was a recognized variety. Of course the varieties mentioned were very different in appearance at the above dates to what they are now.

From these details we see that nearly all the chief domestic races existed before 1600. Before that time the Jacobin had a much less perfect hood, the Turbit had no frill, the Pointer had much shorter legs, and was in every way less remarkable than it is to-day, the Fantail had much fewer and smaller feathers in its tail, and was without the extended chest of the present day winner. Tumblers did not exist, Barbs were of a totally different appearance and Carriers had only a slight development of wattle and cere. In short, the several varieties had at this early period not diverged in so great a degree as is now the case.

There are over 150 different varieties of domestic Pigeons, and fanciers almost unanimously believe that nearly all these different varieties are descended from several and different wild breeds.

Pigeons at the Brockton Fair, held October 2-5, at Brockton, Mass., will be housed in a new pavilion thirty-four by one hundred and forty feet. Brockton has in years past brought out a fine display of pigeons, both for quality and quantity. With the extra efforts displayed this coming season they shall enjoy a most successful exhibition. For premium list address Mr. F. W. Rogers.

The show dates published, also list of Specialty Clubs, in the American Fancier, are complete and up-to-date. They eloquently testify to the wonderful growth of the fancy.

The American Fancier issues a complete list of all the awards at the different fairs and shows. Secretaries are requested to send same to the editorial office as soon as the awards are made.

The Show Hoomer still continues to attract the attention of lovers of Pigeons, and well it may, for it has a most symmetrical appearance, and is well worthy of the position it now occupies. No variety of Pigeon has made so much progress during the last few years in England than the Show Homer. At the present time Show Homers are sold at fabulous prices in England. We would like to see more American fanciers taking interest in this variety.

It is a well known fact that illustrations tend to improve a publication to a great degree. It is our desire to publish as many good half-tones of lofts and birds as our space allows, and we should therefore be glad to receive from our subscribers any thing in this line which they might desire published. We have facilities for making first class half-tones from photographs, and will sell the original plates after use in the American Fancier at cost price. All cuts are published free of charge.

A fair will be held Oct. 3and 4 under the auspices of the Granges and people of Durham, Lee, Newfields, and Newmarket, N. H. The Peigeon exhibit will be one of the many attractions.

In a recent letter from Mr. Samuel Johnson, President of the Eastern Fantail Club, states a successful season with his blacks. We no of no one who has given this color more attention than Mr. Johnson. His stock includes many champions of both England and America. Although his stud is unknown in the show room, they will play a prominent part when they appear.

The coming shows will probably bring out a grand display of Fantails, as reports show that most all have had good success. A great deal depends into whose hands a variety falls in this respect. Fantails have been most fortunate.

The Home of Winning Magpies.

On the title page of this issue we publish a half-tone of Mr. A. W. Drake's magpie lofts at Lattimer Mines, Pa.

Mr. Drake has spared neither time or money in the construction of these lofts. The main building, on the left, is two and one half stories high, and contains, on the first floor, a feed and mating room, a hospital and two breeding rooms.

The second floor comprises three breeding rooms. The nesting places are made of shelves in the form of compartments, each pair having two earthenware nest pans.

Coarse sawdust is the only material used by Mr. Drake.

The floors are covered with a coarse, gritty sand. Once every week the loft is thoroughly scraped and cleaned, the sand raked up and screened, and the nest pans cleaned and filled with fresh coarse sawdust and Lice Powder. The floors in the entries of the breeding rooms are swept every morning, and the loft at all times kept scrupulously clean.

If all fanciers would pay the same attention as Mr. Drake in this respect, we would have less disease among the Pigeons, and derive so much more pleasure in keeping them. In visiting the different lofts, how many times we see birds of extra quality housed in a building that hasn't been cleaned in six months! How disgusted we are, and anxiously wait the time when the owner has finished describing his favorite birds.

What a different appearance these birds would make in a well kept loft. The Pigeon house can be kept clean, no matter how small, in fact, better have a few good birds properly kept, than a large flock in some dirty garret of a barn.

A disinfectant is frequently sprayed around the loft, which produces a pleasant odor.

In each breeding room, a bath pan, made in circular form, of cast iron, with an outer circle, to catch the splash and keep the floors dry, is placed. The whole loft is heated with steam from early fall to late spring.

The different colors, viz: Black, Red, Yellow, Blue, and Silver are kept in separate rooms, and they present a most beautiful appearance.

On the right of the cut, the one story building contains four rooms, 8x12 ft, These rooms are used for the young stock as soon as they are old enough to care for themselves. This idea is a most excellent one, and should be practiced by all fanciers.

Many youngsters are lost annually by all owing them to remain in the breeding quarters as they disturb the parent birds in their care of the next round of youngsters.

On the outside of the building are four aviaries of the same size as the the rooms, covered with one inch wire netting, sides and top. This building, like the main building, is set on brick piers about two feet from the level of the ground, which has effectually prevented rats from entering.

All partitions between the rooms are of wire netting and the whole loft is light and airy. Aviaries are provided with every room of all the buildings. The birds have access to these on all pleasant days.

The record and pedigree is kept of all birds, and at a glance Mr. Drake can tell what this or that bird has done either in the show pen or breeding loft, also its ancestors for many generations back.

Cracked Corn, Canada Peas, Kaffir Corn, Millet, Wheat and Grit comprise the menu for the Magpies that are fortunate enough to have Lattimer Mines for their home.

The quality of stock owned by Mr. Drake is too well known to need any mentioning, as their record in the show pen during the last few years has proven.

Training Pointers for the Show Pen.

The faculty possessed by many first-class pouters of blowing up a good globular crop is partly hereditary or the result of good breeding, and partly the resule of training. It is partly due to good pedigree, because in the first instance to be able to throw up a symmetrical and good globe, the bird itself must be truly formed; it must be possessed of sufficient length in front of the legs to carry a crop large enough to blow; the legs must be placed at a proper angle to give the correct carriage, and the birth about the point of the breast bone, or just in front of the insertion of the legs with the body, must be slender so as to show distinctly where the globe commences when properly inflated. Of course, like human beings, birds differ in temperament. Some are naturally shy or sulky, and can only be got into a show with great difficulty; others, of a more gay and salacious disposition, will disport themselves on any slight provocation as though to the manner born, which, as is endeavored to be shown above, is the case to a very considerable extent, because, given a bird with the characteristics described above, the chances are that he is a well-bred one, and that his parents knew full well how to make the most of themselves; but, on the other hand, take a short, thick-bodied, clumsy bird, with legs set on like those of a runt or a duck, and all the training in the world will never make him a stylish pigeon, even if he inflated his crop almost to the point of rupture. Therefore, I would say do not waste time in endeavoring to train inferior birds, but procure good stock and the task wil be easy enough.

There have ben scores and hundreds of birds which required very little training for the show pen, but the moment they were called upon by a few snaps of the finger and thumb, and a "coo-o-o" or two from the owner or feeder, would put themselves at once into form, as if they knew exactly what was required of them; but of course all birds are ont like this, and with young or shy birds it is frequently necessary to submit them to a regular course of training, for which purpose it is advisable to have a good, light, roomy pen constructed either in the loft or aviary, or portable, so as to be used in the house or elsewhere. Then, your bird being in good health and condition, place him in the pen, stand a yard or so away, and endeavor to excite him by snapping the finger and thumb and uttering peculiar calls, which are well known to old fanciers, but somewhat difficult to write, but may be described as something like "cu-up, cu-up, cooicoo, cooicoo," uttered in rather a high pitch of the voice, and encouraging the bird to move about the pen, which he should do with a high prancing action, as if trying to step over imaginary hurdles or minature five-barred gates. If the bird be a cock, and is difficult to get out, sometimes the exhibition of a hen on the outside of the pen will stimulate him to action, and vice versa.

It would bea great improvement if the pen (which need not be an expensive article) were made large enough for two birds, with a wire division in the centre fitted with a sliding board to draw out occasionally to allow the birds, say cock and hen, to see and play up to each other. The pen could also be used as a matching pen. In many cases it would be advisable to shut before commencing the training, and give a little extra stimulating food, such as a few grans of hempsed, once a day, but be particular not to allow the bird to have access to water for some hours before putting him through his facings—the chances of many first-class birds of taking prizes have frequently been marred by a neglect of this precaution. If it were practicable, the bird might be put in walking pen twice a day, but not for too long a spell, lest he get tired and sulky, and when returned to his ordinary abode be sure he has water and good food to go to.

The West Side District National Federation, American Homing Pigeon Fanciers, flew their annual 100-mile young bird race from Tryonville, Pa., on Saturday. The birds were liberated by official Liberator C. W. Savelle, who wired, "Birds liberated, eleven-fifty seven a. m., partly cloudy, south-east wind." The following list shows the positions in the race the first two being diploma winners:

Loft	Speed in Yards Per Minute.
Knox & Betts	1114.87
Fellows & Walker	1112.40

The West Side District, National Federation American Homing Pigeon Fanciers, flew their 150-mile young bird race from Hubbard, O., yesterday. The birds were liberated by Official Liberator R. W. Bell, who wired: "Liberated at 8.45 a. m., central standard time. Weather fine." The first bird arrived at the loft of Knox & Betts at 2.55 p. m. This was an exceedingly hard race for the birds, as they flew against a head wind the whole distance, and, considering this, they made very good speed. The following list shows the positions in the race, the first two being diploma winners:

Loft	Speed in Yards Per Minute.
Knox & Betts	850.40
John P. Young	828.49
Knox & Betts	827.90
Fellows & Walker	827.50

TURBITS.

Some say the majority of English birds are deficient in beak qualities compared to the birds bred here, my experience is and has been the reverse. Birds I have imported turn out to be all head and beak qualities, very little attention having been paid to color and markings. For instance, have a black Turbit cock that has hardly a sign of a frill and nothing extra in peak, very foul in thighs and counts only nine and seven in flights, yet this bird won first at a show in England, and why? Because he is perfection in beak, skull and gullet. As to mating for colors, have had him mated to a strawberry hen the past season and they have produced one yellow spangle, one silver spangle, one beautiful red and five blacks, most of them off in markings, but all good in head qualities.

I like head points but don't believe in breeding for them exclusively, else we eventually lose the turbit type entirely, because it is the markings which make the Turbit and distinguishes it from that "sport" the Peaked Owl.

With regard to the success in breeding have had good luck. Had only one case of canker, and that I cured by swabbing the throat with a strong solution of alum water. Many lose lots of young birds by keeping the floor covered with sawdust, the latter, adhering to the grain, would be picked up by the old birds and pumped into the young, causing indigestion and death. Keep the floor covered with plenty of good sharp sand, and in corners place air-slaked lime, give them shavings sprinkled with coal oil for a foundation in their nest pans and plenty of tobacco stems to keep them busy carrying and I believe you will find Turbits will do extremely well.

TURBIT.

PRACTICAL NOTES.

Always read the practical notes carefully through, because though you know all about the management of Pigeons, there may be little matters that escape your memory, which such notes will recall.

Always look carefully over your flock once a day, and if you see any birds mopey or dropping their wings, remove them then and there, as the old maxim, a stitch in time saves nine, applies to Pigeons, and one ill bird may infect all the rest.

Always keep Epsom salts and sweet oil by you, as you may want them at any moment.

Always see that each Pigeon gets its proper quantity of food, because very often the stronger ones will push the younger and weaker ones away.

Always give just enough food at one time that will all be eaten, none should ever be left lying about.

MR. WIDGER'S BLUE TURBIT HEN.
Winner of the Champion Cup at the Crystal Palace.

Always give as great a variety of food as possible, constant change of diet is the way to raise strong, robust Pigeons.

Always give your birds a little hemp seed, once or twice a week during the moulting season.

MINNEAPOLIS PIGEON SHOW.

The Minnesota State Poultry Pigeon Association wil hold the largest and best Pigeon show held in this state.

Arrangements are being made to make this department one of the leading features of the exhibition. The building will be handsomely decorated with palms and plants.

Superintendent George Leath, of the State Association, has given orders to spare no expense in making the pigeon department a success.

The Minnesota Fanciers' Club and the Minneapolis Homing Pigeon Club National Federation will enter a grand team of birds.

So come brother fanciers, with birds, and help make the show a grand success.

All correspondence should be addressed to me, No. 3800 Sheridan Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Swamped With Orders.

To The American Fancier:

Kindly cut out my large classified advertisement and just run the small one. I am swamped with orders. Have had to refuse some. Have had as high as eleven settings of my best eggs ordered in one mail. Please cut the ad out as soon as possible. Wishing you success with your bright, newsy paper, I remain,

Very truly yours.
ARTHUR BOUCK.
Frankfort, N. Y., April 20, 1906.

The Right Sort of Inquiries.

To The American Fancier:

We are getting a great many inquiries from our advertisement in The American Fancier and they are of the right sort and have several fine sales under way. We care more for this class of inquiries than those we receive by the dozen and which never amount to anything.

PRAGER & SHILLING.
Chicago, Ill., April 26, 1906.

Good Returns.

To The American Fancier:

We received American Fancier with ad in it, and have already had good returns from the same.

Yours truly,
ATWOOD KREIDER.
Lititz, Pa.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION—Send twenty five cents and we will send The American Fancier for thirteen weeks to one address.

The Latest and Best Book on Success With Poultry is

999 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

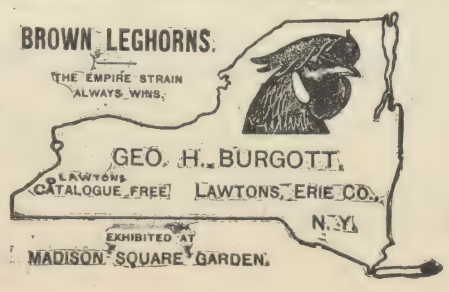
The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.



Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

Silver Spangled Hamburgs

BY THE REV. C. D. FARRAR.

There is no more beautiful bird living than the Silver Spangled Hamburgh; and I say this without fear of contradiction. As in the case of the blacks I propose to begin with the cock-breeding pen. In selecting a cock it is absolutely essential to select a bird of perfectly pure colour; really black and white. There are so many cocks that show a tinge of yellow. You will be told, no doubt, that this is only sunburn, that the bird has been running out in all weathers, and will come quite white after the moult. Better insist that he be white before the moult, or you will assuredly have some bad coloured chickens. There are many points in a silver spangle cock that require very careful watching.

I have spoken of colour, pure black and white; the next point to be careful about is the shape of the spangles; these must be round, not pear shaped, and they must be laid on evenly, so that you can see the white between. The bird must not be all black, or we call him too dark, and he must not be patchy, bits of white and bits of black. To get a good even black and white bird is very difficult without the assistance of art.

In selecting a stock bird, I would begin with the tail. Silver spangle cocks usually excel in tail properties. In hardly any other variety is there such beautiful fulness and sweep. The points to look for in the tail are length of feather, width of feather, absolute purity of white, and big bold round spangles. Some birds show crossed sickles like those of a Brahma cock. I dislike such birds, and always reject them. If you can get a perfectly pure white tail, you will generally get a bird good in other points. The spangles should be as green as possible.

I like a bird with a good striking comb of moderate size; not a great coarse beefy comb, but, above all, natural. These can be bred, strange though it may sound. Take care that the bird has a perfectly sound face. Silver spangles are rather prone to go white in face, but, if rightly bred from cherry-faced birds, this can be obviated. I am breeding at present from a four-year-old bird, and he is as sound faced as any cockerel. The ears should be of moderate size, white and round, and free from blush.

The hackle is a very important point. Formerly hackles used to be pure white. These have long ago disappeared, and the requirement now is a sharp and well ticked hackle; a vast improvement on the old style, but far more difficult to obtain. You will notice I said that the hackle must be "ticked." In too many cocks this ticking gives place to splashes and streaks of colour, as in a pullet-breeding cock, and this always leads to muttiness at the foot of the hackle—a very great defect. Get the hackle as clearly and evenly ticked as possible; ticks, mind you, not splashes; and let the hackle flow well over the back and shoulders.

The breast will be the next item that requires attention. It must be as evenly spangled as possible right up to the throat, and the spangles free from any laced edgings. These are most objectionable, though I know they can be removed with a pair of scissors and infinite patience. A good breast should require no "thinning out," to use a euphemistic expression for plucking. The spangling should extend right away down to the thighs, and the further it goes down the better.

The shoulder butts are generally a difficult point. Many birds fail here badly. There must be no suspicion of rustiness, but again clear black and white. The wings themselves must be pure white with good distinct bars, the bigger the better. Many otherwise good birds often fail in bars—are as we say, " a bit weak in bars." The steppings are a great point, and should be clear and bold, not like a straight line drawn down the wing. The saddle hackle should be as like the neck hackle as possible, and the feathers as long as possible. The legs must be blue.

There will generally be one or two such cocks as I have tried to describe at one of the big shows of the year. Secure one for your stock bird if you possible can. You will have to pay for him, but this will not matter. I gave £20 for such a chicken last back end.

The hens to mate with such a cock will take some seeking out. There are plenty of so-called cock-breeding hens knocking about, but they would not do at all. I have said before, and I say once more, that chance-bred birds are no good. You want the right blood, or you will never do any good. If I am going to buy, I always try to get related birds. I know you are often told that in-breeding is fatal. I never found it so. I have found "out-breeding," if I may coin a word, very much so.

I will suppose that my readers have claimed the International winner; for I suppose that this will be the show of the future, after the late Palace fiasco. I would, if they have good reason to suppose that the chicken was bred by the exhibitor and not bought to win with—you can generally see by the name, I say, I would advise my readers to take a run down to the winning yard and have a look round; and I would go that same week, as there will be a run on the hens and pullets related to this bird. Do not go and say that you want the sister of the International cockerel, or they will all be his sisters. Go to work with a little diplomacy. Pretend to be a bit "soft," as they say up here. Keep your ears well open, and if you begin to say what a grand chicken the winner was, you will soon hear how he was bred, and certain birds will be pointed out from which he sprang, or you will be told so-and-so is own sister to him. Make a careful note of these birds; but do not let out that you have bought the cockerel. After a time, casually enquire the price of the bird you have marked, and have it caught at once. Nothing like a bird in the hand. Any bird can be run down in a few minutes on the most open run; so make a note of it, like Captain Cuttle.

The mother of the cockerel or his aunt will not be dear at £4, and his sisters at £3 each. You do not want a great lot of them two or three at the outside. The birds you want most, besides being bred right, have the following characteristics: As in the cockerel, the black and white must be sharp and distinct, and made by Nature. My own pens are as evenly marked as if they had been painted to order. The comb must be straight, full of work, and with a nice firm leader. The ears round, smooth, and white. The faces of silver spangled pullets and hens are always rather what we call "gipsy," or dark. The neck hackle should be densely striped, but at the same time distinct.

It is most important that the breast-marking should go right up to the throat. So many pullets and hens are what we call "parson throated"—that is, they have a bit of white just under the throat like a white clerical collar. From such turn away. Be very careful that the bars are clear and broad, and that the "steppings" are well defined.

It is equally important that the hen should be really white in her ground colour as the cock. The place where a hen generally fails is at the wing ends. Here they often are a bit lemony. The tail of a cock-breeding hen is most important. See that it is perfectly pure white on the outside, good length and breadth, and with big bold round spangles at the end of each feather, with a sort of square line all along the end of the tail, and have no white-tipped spangles or feathers that fail altogether to be spangled. A little care in selecting the hens will be well repaid in chicken time. Legs blue.

From such a pen you are bound to get some good chickens, and remember when the season comes round that the pullets are as valuable as the cockerels. Many forget this, and clear out their cock-breeding pullets at so much a dozen. Old hands are wiser, and sooner than sell them for "nowt," they "neck" them.

In my last article I described the cock-breeding pen; in the present I will speak of the pullet-breeding or Mooney pen. And here let me begin by saying that, in my opinion, a good just as well try to breed a Shetland about the possibility of breeding silver spangled Hamburghs off one pen. Old practical breeders know, of course, that it is nonsense; but many poor amateurs do not, and so, like Don Quixote, they go tilting at this Hamburgh windmill. Anyone who has seen cock-breeders and silver Moonies together will see at once the impossibility of the whole thing. One might just a swell try to breed a Shetland pony with a Clydesdale. The silver spangle show cock is a very elegant bird; the Mooney is a big coarse bird with a rough head, red ears, and bred solely for marking. How many years, then, would it take to make these opposite "nick"? Well, I should not care to try the experiment. In my humble opinion it would spoil both and improve neither.

The Lancashire Moonies have been

GOLDEN SEBRIGHTS

bred for ages and generations, and are just as much a distinct breed as any other—in fact, but for their marking, I doubt if an amateur would recognise that they were Hamburgs at all. Silver Moonies are not at all common, as very few are bred each year; and when a good one is bred, she goes on winning year after year. "Old Tweedy," the most celebrated hen perhaps that ever lived, and which I once proudly owned, went on winning till she must have been well on to twelve years old. For anyone who will take up silver Moonies there is a great opening, as good ones always command a high price. "Little Billy Smith" has a special penchant for them, and if there is an extra good one about, he is bound to have it, choose what.

In getting together a pen of Moonies, we will begin with the cock. I would strongly advise the purchase of a cockerel as so many cocks will not breed, and nothing is more annoying than to set eggs and find them clear. "As big as a goose" is a very good description, of course a little exaggerated, of a silver Mooney cockerel. You must not look for any of the elegance of shape that distinguishes the show cockerel. The Mooney is as square-rigged as a Dutch ship.

After size look for colour. The body colour must be pure white with great green spangles at the end of each feather. The spangels must be quite round, not pear shaped, though this is very common. Unlike other cocks, the Mooney has no pointed cock saddle-feathers, but they are all spangled like the back and shoulders of a cock-breeding hen; in fact, the bird is hen-feathered all over. The spangling of the breast should be especially bold, the white and the black being evenly distributed, not streaky or blotchy, but as though you had trimmed it to order —as is often done with Mooney hens and pullets. The tail is a very important point. It should be of as pure white as possible, though this is very difficult to get, as most cocks are a bit smutty in the white. At the end of each feather there must be a big curving over, as I have always found these birds more reliable breeders. A very pronounced hen tail often spells unfertile eggs.

The head of the cock is generally a bit rough, though I have seen some very fair heads, but this is not, and never has been, a very great point; hence the Mooney hens have never had such good heads as their sisters, the cock-breeders. Select a bird with a good cherry face, quite free from white, and, personally, I like a bird with reddish earlobes. I do not think that white ears should be required in Mooney hens. The best hens ever seen have had red or reddish ears. I know that reporters of shows often comment on Mooney ears, "A grand hen, but for her stained lobes." But, then, one has to remember that reporters are not infallible, and they probably think that Moonies and cock-breeders alike should have pure white ears. If a Mooney has white ears she probably fails badly in many Mooney points. Is it not better to have a first-class Mooney with red ears, than a very inferior one with white ears? The best Moonies never had anything but red ears, and therefore to get white ears one must cross them—and spoil them. The legs and feet must be blue. To get a good silver Mooney cock you will have to pay £4 or £5, and if he breeds well he will be a cheap bird.

Now for his mates. Do not want too many. I know one cannot have too much of a good thing; but it will cost money, and Mooney hens are not to found—especially if "Little Billy Smith" also wants them! The hen, be picked up for "nowt,' as will be rigged, and should be as big as the proverbial goose. In selecting her, go for the bird that first "catches the eye" for its exceptionally even marking and clear black and white, as often as not that will be the best; but be very careful that she is as Nature made her. In buying pullets this is fairly easy, as few pullets are good enough to show in their first season like the cock, is decidedly Dutch against old hens; they have neither the size nor the markings to make them successful.

An old Mooney hen, unless obtained before she has been got ready for the show pen, is a whole pocket of surprises. You will find after you have had her about eight weeks that she is not a bit like the hen you bought, as "beautifully and clearly mooned" all over. Some fine morning you will ask yourself where that black hen came from in your pen. She is the bird you bought, only the black feathers, then skilfully removed—we call it euphemistically "thinning out,"—have now grown again. I have seen after one of these Moonies has been got ready for a big show, a whole basketful of feathers on the ground. It takes both time and patience to do the "sorting out" but there is no doubt that when well-done, it is very effective. At times it is "a little bit too thick," and when I see a bird with lines of black, that are running longitudinally down her breast, she does not win under me. Still, it is quite possible to breed a good Mooney, and this is what we want to do.

In selecting pullets for moulting out as hens, choose birds over-dark. If light as pullets they will be lighter still as hens. I always select birds marked well up to the throat; nothing looks worse than a "parson-throated" bird. The tail of the pullet or hen is most important; it must be absolutely white on the outside, with a big green spangle at the end of each feather—the tail feathers are always grizzled on the inner side. The bars and steppings in both the cock and hen, must be especially clear and bold. In the breast marking the spangling should go right down to the thighs if possible.

The comb should be fairly neat, and well set on the head. I never like to see a big, rough, coarse comb on a Mooney hen, for to me it always spoils her beauty. It is at the same time a very common failing. For my own part, I do not mind red ears in Moonies, indeed, I believe them to be right, and to go with other good points. The legs and feet must be blue. Moonies live to a great age, and a good hen is a perfect little gold mine. I should be afraid to say what "Old Tweedy" won in her day and generation—something like her own weight I imagine. A good show Mooney hen is a costly bird to buy; but if you are a good judge, you can pick up good pullets at moderate prices, and moult them into hens. A good judge can tell what a pullet will make as a hen.

I consider that for an amateur with a little capital and perseverance to stick to the breed, there is a great opening in silver spangled Moonies. I will never forget some years ago spending a day with Mr. William Cannan at Norwood, and there seeing a pen of the best six Mooney hens ever perhaps put together, running in a bottom with their lord and master; and I can still see the loving and lingering look of admiration with which Mr. Cannan stood and gazed at them. What that pen was worth I shall be afraid to say, but then with Mr. Cannan as with Solomon, money was nothing accounted of—especially if he meant to have a bird.—Poultry, Eng.

"CHITTIES."

"Chitties" are one of the oldest of the Hamburgh tribe, the name being a shortened form of the old Lancashire Chittaprat. An idea is prevalant that they are delicate, and that wherever they are kept roup will be found. No doubt in many cases this is so; it is due, however, not to the birds, but to the insanitary surroundings in which they are placed. If several birds are crowded into a dark-damp, ill-ventilated house, what else can be expected but roup, and a lot of other things besides? Treated rationally and in a hygienic manner, "Chitties" are absolutely hardy. Mine never ail anything; but they sleep in pure air. There is a great future for anyone who will go in for this variety as very few keep it at present; I could almost count the breeders on the fingers of one hand. This is because the idea has got abroad that it is delicate. The hens are most marvellous layers, and though their eggs are small they make up for it in number, for they lay almost every day.

"Chitties" are pre-eminently birds of marking. The perfection to which this marking has been brought must be seen to be believed, and I do not think much more perfect birds could be made. The same writer to whom I referred in my former article, is busy advocating big coarse birds. But nobody wants big "Chitties." They have been bred for marking for a century or more; and now we have got it, let us by all means keep it. Thirty years ago some busybodies said that black Hamburghs were not big enough; they set to work, got great coarse birds, nearly spoilt the breed, and drove away some of its most ardent votaries. Take care that we do not do the same with "Chitties."

I think I may say without egotism that all the best "Chitties" are bred in the county of broad acres, Yorkshire, and they are nearly all kept up here, too; therefore, to get a pen the purchaser will have to come North. The first thing will be to get hold of a right cockerel. I say cockerel, as although there are some cocks that are very fertile, I think on the whole it is safe to breed off a "Chitty" cockerel—at any rate, early in the season. One great advantage in breeding "Chitties" is that early hatching is not necessary. April or May are soon enough, as the pullets mature very rapidly, and at twenty weeks old are often at their best.

In selecting a cockerel, bear in mind that there are two very differently birds, so different that they do not look like the same variety; and yet both will breed well, if only it is known how they are produced. The one cockerel is marked exactly like a show pullet; the other is white with splashes of color here and there, and some good penciling under the saddle, and a blackish tail. I should never like to use one of these latter birds, unless I knew exactly how he was bred. On the whole, I think it is safer to breed off one of the pencilled-all-over birds, as then it can be seen what the pencilling is like.

It is desirable then to get hold of a bird as finely and sharply pencilled all over as possible. Be most careful to see that the breast pencilling is good, and that it goes right up to the throat. It is that so many fail, being either too coarse and "horse-shoey" in marking, or failing altogether, and showing a lot of white. Be very particular about the quality of the tail lacing; and prefer a cock that has his sickles slightly curved over. These birds are usually more reliable as breeders than the perfectly hen-feathered ones. Select a bird with a neat comb, for these can be found, though not of course with such heads as the show cocks. Still, if the bird is very perfectly marked overlook a little roughness of head. Insist, however, on a good cherry face, and be very particular that he has good smooth points in the pullets. If the purchaser is fortunate enough to get a really good cock, and he breeds well, stick to him as long as he will get any chickens. See that he is pencilled well down on the thighs, and that his legs are blue.

One nuisance with "Chitty" cockerels is that they are so very precocious, and the most quarrelsome birds I know. They are always fighting as chicks, and after a "do" they present a very sorry appearance. The best thing, therefore, is to send them all away to some neighboring farm till they are wanted, as then they will not hurt the old barndoor hens, as they would the good exhibition pullets; and if they get fighting, an old cock will soon master them, and keep them in good order.

Some hens or pullets should now be obtained. If the buyer is a novice, I should say get pullets, as it is then possible to see them at their best, and not as "had beens." Very few "Chitties" are as good as hens as they were as pullets. There are notable exceptions, and I have now a two-year-old hen that could beat most pullets. As a rule, however, hens after their first moult go a little weak on breast, show, that is to say, a bit of "horse-shoey" marking; and they are inclined to become coarsely marked all over. Still, if they were good pullets this will not matter a bit for breeding.

The great thing to look for in the pullet is fineness of penciling—the finer the marking the more valuable and the more costly the bird. Next to "fineness of penciling," we look for evenness of ringing." A good pullet looked at when held at arm's length should seem to be ringed evenly all over in circles. Many birds will be found to be marked in different directions, and not evenly ringed; the breast may be very nice, but the markings across the wings will run at a slightly different angle. A great blemish is what we call "shartiness"—when the white haft of the feather, the centre line of white, bows rather too

Big Crop of Turkeys.

Thanksgiving's principal problem is the turkey, and for people in moderate circumstances the problem has been getting increasingly difficult of solution for several years past.

The holiday bird par excellence is the New England grown fowl. This you may learn anywhere except in Pennsylvania and those central Western States, notably Michigan, which yearly send carloads of turkeys to New York and other Eastern markets. There the patristic citizens will not admit that anything excels the home product in delicacy of flavor and tenderness of meat.

But throughout New England and the country at large the New England bird heads the list, that of Rhode Island at the top, because of the prestige given it by one Rhode Islander who annually for many years has sent a turkey to the White House; and next that of Vermont.

But in proportion as the raising of turkeys has been growing more difficult year by year, the prices have advanced, until to-day it is nevessary to pay 35 cents a pound for a fowl which a decade ago could have been bought for 16. The increasing scarcity of these royal birds is due to the ravages of the blackhead disease.

So distructive has this disease proved in New England that whereas not many years ago many farmers marketed each November flocks of several score turkeys, thereby adding materially to the never too plentiful cash income of their farms, to-day there is probably not a farm in the State of Rhode Island which can show a flock of 100 birds, while most farmers have discontinued altogether their efforts to bring turkeys to maturity.

At this juncture a beneficent government has stepped in to cooperate with the State, which takes greatest pride in its gallinaceous product, and the experiment station at Kingston, R. I., is conducting a series of adventures in a hitherto untrodden field of farm science. Dr. Cooper Curtice is the man who has undertaken to learn what the blackhead disease really is, how it is transmitted and how it may successfully be combated.

He has met with a degree of success in the year and a half he has devoted to the question, and although he has not solved the whole mystery, there is reason for hope that before long turkeys will flourish as they did in the past, and may be marketed at a price which will enable every table to boast of one.

Turkeys are, despite their magnificent proportions and apparent strength, by far the most delicate fowl the farmer has ever domesticated. Their first month of life is as critical a period as the second summer of a baby; more so, in fact, for even in the slums of a city, no such proportion of babies ever succumbed to their circumstances as of turkeys in the care of the average raiser.

The first great menace to the health of a young turkey is moisture. If a chick up to four weeks old wets its feet its grave may as well be dug without delay, for it is pretty sure to need one.

But this difficulty is not an insurmountable one. Farmers who have found turkeys worth raising—and they are well worth it at present prices provided they can be reared without too great an outlay—have decided that it paid to keep the chicks under cover and on board floors until they were able to withstand variable New England weather.

At two months old the turkey is a lusty, long legged fellow, able to hunt his own grasshoppers and learning to roost high. At three months he is a good sized broiler. And it is to the broiler that many turkeys are going nowadays, as the result partly of a new taste which has pronounced a broiled turkey chicken a dish befitting an epicure's table and partly because of the farmer's conviction, bred of costly experience, that he can never get the turkey to maturity.

It is at the broiling stage that the dread blackhead disease appears. Examination of diseased birds under the microscope revealed the fact that blackhead was caused by a minute protozoan. The common name arose from the appearance of the turkey affected, its head actually becoming black.

The scientists have decided that the proper name of the disease is infectious entero-hepatitis. It is indicated not only by the black head, due to suspended circulation, but by intestinal sores and by white spots on the liver. It is an ailment very similar to appendicitis.

Early experiments demonstrated that many of the chicks sickened within twelve days of the hatch and that most of them died in from four to six weeks. It was learned also that the protozoan which caused the disease gained access to the intestines through the food.

The next step was the formulation of a theory, not yet altogether established but well on the way to it, that if turkeys are kept on ground which has not been devoted to turkey raising and are provided with food which has not been contaminated, they will be free from the disorder. To this end birds hatched artificially have been placed in pens on ground which it was certain had not before been given over to poultry, and distant a mile or so from other turkey pens, and the results have been highly satisfactory.

So carefully was this plan carried out that even the eggs, before they were placed in the incubators, were washed in an alcohol solution so that by no possibility could the protozoan be transmitted unless it were contained within the egg, which is considered impossible.

The results of this experiment have surpassed expectation. In one case of one flock of 108 only two were lost from blackhead when from two to three months old.

In another instance in which equal care was taken the mortality was greater, and it is thought the germs of disease were carried in a gale. In still another case in which the loss was great it was traced to the food, which was furnished from a common stock.

It is believed at the experiment station that the investigators will son be able to tell the farmers of the State how to restore the turkey to its former high economic place and hat the almost forgotten gobble will again be sweet music in aggricultural ears. If this end is accomplished it will no longer be necessary to pay 35 cents a pound for the adornment of the Thanksgiving table.—N. Y. Sun.

MOULTING.

This annual event is upon us, and a few suggestions therefore, as to the best means of getting poultry through the moult, will be appropriate to the season. Careful treatment is necessary at this time for several reasons. The more quickly poultry are got through the moult the sooner they will begin to lay, and the healthier and better they will be for it through the coming winter. With utility poultry keepers the time of the annual moult ought to be a time of constant and unwearying attention, special care being taken that every bird which seems to need the slightest amount of attention gets what it needs. A bird which is thrown back at moulting time will very often develop into an unhealthy and unprofitable member of the poultry yard, and birds very often do get thrown back in this way, when, had they received even a very small amount of attention, the natural process of changing the feathers would have been consummated without any difficulty. Poultry are like other living creatures —some enjoy better health than others for various causes, which we need not enter into; and in a large flock of poultry there are always some members of the community which are less healthy, and which require care and attention distinct from the others.

It may be remarked that young poultry always moult more easily than old poultry. They commence to shed their feathers earlier, and they do not take so long in the process. The older a fowl is, moreover, the later it usually begins to moult, and the longer it takes in the process—very often old hens get so late that the winter is upon them before they are half through their moult, and, consequently, they never do really get through the moult satisfactorily, with the result that they are always in indifferent health more or less afterwards.

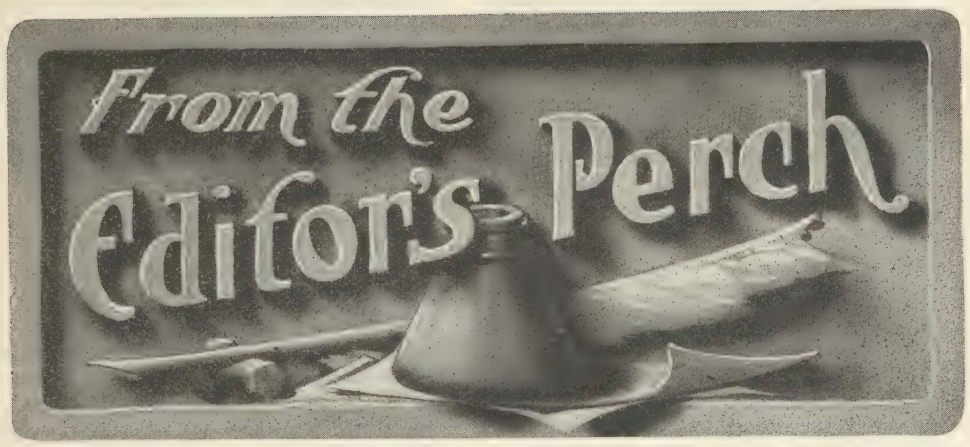
We need not enter into a scientific description of the growth of feathers. They are actually, of course, a development from the skin just as hair is. What we want to know for practical purposes is, how can they be most rapidly developed when the old feathers have been shed. Nature—always provident—plans that the feathers shall not all fall out at once, the process of shedding is a gradual one, but when the weather is favourable poultry will shed their feathers more rapidly—warm weather at the end of summer seeming to encourage rapid shedding. Obviously the process of moulting involves attacks upon the physical resources of the bird, and not only is warmth essential—and by warmth I mean something more than a high degree of temperature—I mean rather freedom from cold, but more than that, birds need to be fed on stimulating food, which will not only maintain the bodily warmth, but will tend to grow feather substance. This is the period of the year at which, if ever, birds may have a little Indian corn, that being a heat producer, whilst at the same time they should have a liberal supply of bone and fibrine meat, both of which will suppiy what is necessary for the growth of new feathers. Birds which are moulting must, above all things, be protected from sudden changes of weather. Often in August and September the warmth of summer gives way for a time to bleak, cold, stormy, wet weather and poultry in the middle of the moult are often seriously interfered with by reason of thi schange. Provision should, therefore, be made in the way of shelters, cratching sheds, etc., so that they never need be exposed to bleak, unfavorable weather. Amongst stimulating foods I might also mention hemp seed and linseed—little of which will not only encourage the development of feathers by reason of the oily matter which they contain, but linseed particularly has the reputation of bringing out the feathers sound in colour and glossy in appearance, an important consideration with those poultry keepers who breed for exhibition purposes.

Now, what is to be done with a bird which is "hung in moult," as the expression is, that is to say, a bird which seems unable either to shed its old feathers, or when it has shed them, to bring forth the new ones. Various tonics have been suggested, the best of which probably is a dose of quinine of quinine and iron, preferably in the form of pills or gelatin capsules. This remedy, with increased attention in the way of little niceties of food, such as small pieces of fat bacon—a little chemical food in the drinking water, and removal to a place where the atmosphere is quite warm, and, if possible, humid, will generally effect all that is required. With regard to a humid atmosphere, I may say that when a bird is hung in its moult, one of the best ways of getting it on is to transfer it to a moderately warm greenhouse, where the air is moist as well as warm. I have known a good many cases in which birds moulting very hardly, as the expression goes, have been brought through rapidly and in splendid condition by this method.—Aesculapius, in Pigeons and Poultry.

Standby for Years.

To The American Fancier:

We are more than pleased to see the old American Fancier by itself again. It has been our standby for years. It is the one that heads the line, favoring neither friend or foe, and when it comes to show reports, you have the whole thing, not "our patrons winning;" such reports are like reading a prospectus instead of the book, and, again, the news is fresh, brief and to the point. Long may her eagle live to scream.



Yours truly,

W. E. SAMSON.

Forest City, Pa., May 14, 1906.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS AND ADVERTISERS.

Owing to the increasing circulation of The American Fancier, together with a corresponding demand upon our advertising columns, correspondents and advertisers are notified that all communications should reach the office of The American Fancier, Ossining, N. Y., or Havemeyer Building, No. 26 Cortlandt Street, New York City, before 4:30 o'clock P. M., on Monday of each week, in order to secure insertion in the current issue of the paper.

Mr. H. V. Crawford, secretary of the Madison Square Garden Show, New York, has returned to his home in Montclair, N. J., after a summer's sojourn in the wilds of Canada. He is looking and feeling tip-top and during a brief stay in New York last week informed us that the New York show for 1907 will be conducted on some new lines that will make it greater than ever. There will be some surprises in store for the rank and file when the bell rings at the Garden Gate, the first week in January, of the New Year.

Some of our English brethren on the other side of the salty pond are engaged in a mid-summer discussion as to whether Sebright Bantams should or are eligible to compete in the Rosecomb class, and furthermore, are seriously asking: "Are Sebrights Rosecombs?" This may amuse American fanciers, who, notwithstanding the disparaging remarks of the wise man of the Hub, have a standard of perfection that makes it clear to all what to do with Sebrights and Rosecomb bantams in a showroom. If the Poultry Club's English standard would be as universally respected as the American one, there would be no cause for the difference of opinion existing reparding the status of the two varieties of bantams referred to above.

Mr. R. E. Porter handles the subject alluded to in the above paragraph, in a most sensible manner, when he writes in the current issue of our esteemed English Contemporary:

"It must be conceded that Sebrights are rosecombed bantams, in that they are bantams with the "rose" type of comb, and I think there is not much doubt that the Rosecomb bantam entered somewhat into the make-up of the Sebright; but they are now entirely distinct races, breeding as true to points as any variety of large or small fowl in the Fancy, and, moreover, there are separate standards of perfection for them. Strange as it may appear, since he is one of the best-known bantam breeders in the British Isles, Mr. Fred Entwisle holds the opinion that it is quite legitimate to allow Sebrights to compete with Rosecombs, but in these circumstances he has told me, they are not correct in the many other variety classes, that is, unless the words "black or white" are affixed. Rosecomb classes are for Sebrights as well as for the special race known as the Rosecomb.

Personally, in view of the fact that separate standards of perfection have been formulated for the two breeds, and that they are so distinct from one another in most points. I cannot see the force of Mr. Entwisle's argument. If the classes were for rosecombed bantams the case would be altogether altered; but as they at present stand, and bearing in mind all the facts I have mentioned, I, like the vast majority of bantam exhibitors, cannot see the reason for it. When Rosecomb bantams were first brought out, well over half a century ago, and for some years subsequently, I believe that it was customary to refer to them as Black bantams and White bantams, according to their colour, or even as Hamburgh bantams. But when diminutive fowls became more popular, and other breeds had their black and white varieties, the word Rosecomb was added. The Sebright bantam has nearly always been known as a Sebright, although it has sometimes been referred to as the Laced bantam and the Sir John Sebright fowl; but never in its whole history has it been classed in works on the subject as a Rosecomb, and its varieties have never exceeded three, viz., silver, gold and creamy, the last-named not being an exhibition specimen.

"For these reasons it appears incomprehensible to me that there should have been any question about the proper classes for Sebrights, and I cannot understand how it came about that judges allowed themselves to fall into such an error. Personally, I would not encourage the showing of Sebrights in Rosecomb classes, and I consider that it is the duty of all judges to pass birds so penned, which would soon put a stop to it. Why should Sebrights be so favoured? Other breeds of bantams, quite as popular as, if not more popular than the Sebright, have often to compete in the any other variety classes. Moreover, as I have said, the stamp of the two breeds is different, the Rosecomb being a diminutive Hamburgh, the cock's tail being well adorned with flowing sickles, and the hen's being carried closely and not fan-shaped as in the Sebright. It is this pandering to big exhibitors' fads that has done much to cause confusion in the Fancy."

To "we 'uns" on this side of the Atlantic, the idea of allowing Sebrights and Rosecombs to compete together is about as consistent as having a Jersey Red hog compete with one of W. A. Smith's Peruvian Guinea pigs.

Field "Marshal" F. Wemple of the Empire Cooping Company, stopped at the American Fancier office one day last week long enough to advise us of the fact that he sold all the exhibition coops at the Taunton Fair, to the Brocton, Mass., association. This indicates that the big Brocton poultry show, October 2 to 5, will have the largest and best equipped building in the United States, as the coops bought several years ago were numerically greater than any ever purchased by one association.

Keep an eye on that Brocton Show. There will be a display of Rhode Island Reds there that will surprise the fanciers of this popular variety. Mr. Lester W. Tompkins has been specially engaged to judge the Reds, and he ought to make good, being an old fancier breeder and staunch supporter of the new American variety.

The illustration and article re Frizzle Bantams, which appears on page 3, of our September 8th issue of the American Fancier, no doubt interests Bantam fanciers, in this country fully as much as it did the cousins on the other side of the Atlantic, when it was published in the Feathered World. The following letter, written to Mrs. Comyus-Leever of the Feathered World, England, by Mr. E. J. Buckpitt, is complementary and in line with Mr. Reyner's article:

"For some years now I have bred and exhibited white Frizzle Bantams, and it is a matter of everlasting surprise that more fanciers do not take up this, the quaintest of the many quaint varieties of the pigmy tribe. It is to be feared that suggestions and hints at times thrown out by fanciers of other varieties, as to the artificial curling, etc., that is required, debar novices from starting. I should like to say that after an experience of nearly all varieites of Bantams I know of no breed that go as straight from shell to show pen as do Frizzles. Washed, of course, they must be, but provided this be properly done, very little else is needed to make them fit to face the judge's wand. They certainly cannot be reared on damp ground, but given a dry run the chicks are easy to rear, and certainly are as hardy as any other variety I know. Without wishing to appear egotistical, may I cite the instance that in 1904 I despatched a Frizzle cock and hen from here to the great show held in Paris that year; they went in an ordinary exhibition two-compartment hamper, and both won first, the cock also special and silver medal. At the close of the show they were repacked and returned safely, and within three days were winning in England, and are the parents of the pair of birds now illustrated. I think this will want some beating by any other breed of variety Bantams.

Their docility is wonderful, and they are intelligent in a marked degree, layers of good-sized eggs, excellent sitters and mothers. A good percentage of chickens come plain feathered, but these are invaluable in the breeding pen. An article recently appeared in an issue of the Variety Bantam Club Year Book on Frizzles, written by Mr. Geo. Reyner, to whom I frankly own I owe my start in this variety, and to whose never-failing kindness in imparting information do I owe the strong hand that I to-day hold. I hope that as a result of the illustration now appearing we may welcome many new recruits to this absolutely the most charming of the many charming varieties of Bantams."

The hue and cry over faked poultry illustrations is amusing. Editors should practice what they preach. Condemning fake pictures, and, at the same time, publishing some of the latter, is not the proper way to handle the subject. Cut them out entirely, and set a magnificent example for the rest of us, especially those who believe any good picture is worth publishing, whether it has been faked or not. If some of the owners of birds desire to lie about their merits, and insist on ideal cuts being made of average specimens, that is another story, as Mr. Kipling was wont to remark. Improving a photograph to bring out sections in shape and color to better advantage is not such a serious offence as some of the suddenly stricken R. E. Morse converts would make us believe. Some artists can do this job of fixing up photos better than others.

Mr. Edward Brown, who has spent a brief six weeks in the United States recently, some years ago wrote up the French varieties of poultry as well as the methods pursued by the poultry raisers of France, under the name of Stephen Beale, in one of our agricultural papers, which we reprint below. This will answer several inquiries we have received regarding the fowls of France and the methods of handling the same. Mr. Brown, in writing of his visit to the Paris show, remarks:

"The poultry section of the Paris Show is divided into two classes, for live and dead. Both have special attractions of their own, and together give a completeness to the Madri Gras show which we do not find elsewhere in Europe. The fancy element does not enter into French poultry nearly so much as in Britain, and hence we do not see that perfection of type or that uniformity of character to be noticed at our leading exhibitions. At the same time, however, there is no doubt that breeders realize the importance of maintaining purity of strain. Further, it can be at once seen in this show what are the economic qualities of any breed. For instance, if any one unacquainted with the subject were to look at the Le Mans fowl, he would never for one moment dream that these birds could be bred to such perfection by fattening, as is the case, and the same is seen in other varieties. Moreover, it is difficult to judge of the delicacy of the flesh and skin when looking at a fowl externally, and of course the English notion that only white-legged fowls can be good for table purposes is at once dissipated by the fact that the finest of French table poultry are dary legged. We believe that much of the quality seen in French table poultry is due to the systems of fattening adopted there; at the same time, however, there must be the tendency or disposition to lay on flesh, as also the power to produce the finest and most delicate qualities.

"The live poultry are placed around the gallery overlooking the main ha of the Palais l'Industrie. The authorities make no provisions for feeding the fowls; hence the great bulk of exhibitors are what may be termed dealers, people who can keep attendants at the show looking after the birds. This is a great drawback, and as long as it is the rule we fear that the business will reman almost entirely in the hands of the people like this, a regretful circumstance, as the infusion of amateurs would enhance the interest. Further, no charge is made for entry fees, and so large numbers of birds are sent for sale without expectation of securing a prize. The pens are decorated or otherwise by the cards of their owners ,and visitors are constantly reminded that these birds are for sale. A market is an excellent thing, but when a show becomes little more than a market it fails in its object. The judging, on the whole, this year was fairly good, and several well known French authorities were included among those undertaking this duty; of these we may mention M. Lemoine, Megnin and Martin, but we regret that here again the dealer element is rather prominent."

"Taking the live classes as a whole, they may be summed up as follows: Creve Coeurs, which stand first, are fairly good, and are even in type. Certainly we have seen a better lot of this variety than was shown at Paris this week. We do not know why it is, but there is a falling off both in the live and dead classes.

"Houdans are enormous classes, and this breed, which is primarily kept for egg production, is also useful for third of fourth rate table purposes, and in that way it supplies a considerable demand. There was a great want of eveness in the type of these birds and they cannot compare with what were exhibited eight or ten years ago. The introduction of Creve Coeur blood has had its effect in darkening the plumage. Two or three of the exhibits, both in cocks and hens were good, but we should like to see the Houdan maintain more of its old light-mottled appearance, and not have so heavy a body.

"The La Fleche fowls are undoubtedly the features of the show, and we do not remember to have seen a finer lot. Most of the birds are splendid in body, broad in breast, with all those qualities which go to make a first-class table fowl. Size has undoubtedly been taken into consideration by the judges, and this is wise, because in table fowls, diminutive size would soon bring about a rapid deterioration in the variety. I note this year, more perhaps then before, the tendency to white in the face, and this is most probably the result of breeding for the white ear-lobe, for the two generally run together.

"The Du Mans fowls never make great numbers. The fact is that they have never been bred with the same care for external qualities as have those breeds already mentioned. They have many of the points found in the La Fleche, but carry a rosecomb. There were a number of fairly good birds, the winning lot of hens being decidedly the best, and we regret to note that in cocks there is rather a tendency to smallness of size, to encourage which would be a great mistake.

"The La Bresse breed is only represented by one variety, the blacks, and we were sorry that those were rather light in plumage. The show of La Bresse fowls is, however, in spite of his omission very good, and we hope this variety will long maintain its position in eastern France.

"The Barbezieux are a lanky variety of the Mediterranean type, though somewhat heavier in bone. There was a special lack of uniformity in this class, and whilst the Barbezieux is chiefly distinguished as an egg-producing fowl at the same time we like to see the good type sustained.

"The Courtepattee is a variety bred in the La Sarthe district of Normandy, and ought to have very short legs, giving it a squatty appearance. There seems to be a disposition to make the Courtepattee long on the leg, and this would be a great mistake. They are highly appreciated for table purposes, and one of the famous French dishes is formed from these fowls. The winning cock was of the right character, but many others in the class were along way behind him in this respect."

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 11,393 cases. No new features developed to warrant the slightestrevision in prices. The proportion of strictly fancy eggs contained in the arrivals was very small, and the demand was fully equal to the offerings. Complaints were still numerous concerning the quality of the late receipts, many lots showing up in heated and poor condition. Really fine fresh eggs sold readily at 22½@23c when grading extra firsts, and 21½ for western firsts. The very moderate supply of fresh eggs has caused a better demand for No. 1 dirty eggs, and also a livelier interest in early packed refrigerator stock.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 1,106 packages. The arrivals were not as large as receivers anticipated, but, as is usually the case on Monday, considerable stock was late in being delivered. Some of the fresh receipts opened up in poor condition, due to the hot weather prevailing, and partly to careless packing at point of shipment. Western chickens were in free offering and declined to 13½@14c. Fowls were exeremely scarce, and with good demand all grades advanced ½c per pound. Old roosters were active and firm. Squabs sold slowly, excepting large white, but prices were not revised.

His First Love.

Editor American Fancier:
I will contract for space annually in The American Fancier, as I consider it my "first love" in the poultry paper line, having been a subscriber from its first issue. JAMES B. N. FITCH.
Mt. Vernon, N. Y., May 21, 1906.

Like Old Times.

To The American Fancier:
It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,
Very respectfully,

Poultry In Small Runs.

By Geo. A. Palmer.

A short time ago I gave a description of scratching-sheds with costs. I will now give the best method of managing a pen of, say, ten birds with such a shed and a grass run of, say, twelve yards square. If the shed is placed in the centre of the run there is no fear of the birds flying over the wire. If not there, it should be set in the line of wire so as to serve for two smaller runs to be used alternately. In this case a piece of wire must be stretched across the highest point of the roof, or the fowls will fly on to the house and then over to the other side.

It will be seen at once that runs of this size would become tainted in a very short time if the birds had free access to them. It must be distinctly understood at the outset that these runs are used only as grazing ground, and that sufficient exercise is provided in the sheds.

Very few realize how important a part green food plays in successful poultry-keeping. Owing to a mistake, the details of which would take too long here, two turkey hens were once shut in a small grass pen and forgotten for a fortnight. The weather was showery, so that they did not suffer from thirst, and there was plenty of rich aftermath grass for them to feed on. When found they had sunk a few pounds in weight, but were otherwise in excellent condition, the gloss on the plumage being simply remarkable. Within ten days one of the hens went to the Dairy Show and took second prize in the open class. I do not say that this is the best possible way of getting a turkey up for show; but a comparative rest from grain feeding for a few weeks, on a dietary chiefly green food and a little meat, cleans the internal organs and has a very beneficial effect on highly-bred stock.

A very observant and successful poultry-keeper, who was running birds on the colony system on a two hundred acre farm, once asked me if fowls ate basic slag. He said, "I dressed a field with slag last year, and the hens in that field have laid better than any have done before." The fowls did eat the slag, but it was at second-hand, in the rich clovers that the slag had brought there. Fowls in confinement, kept short of green food, lay eggs poor in quality, the yolks being pale. Such eggs are neither good to eat, nor likely to bring strong chickens. The cause is chiefly lack of iron in the blood. I much prefer to give the iron and phosphates to hens in the form of rich green food than out of a doctor's shop. Properly fed hens will do their best without artificial stimulants of any kind.

Under the system we are considering, the grass in the plots should be made of the highest possible quality. If the land is anything approaching a red clay, a dressing of ten hundredweight of basic slag to the acre (cost, about 25s.) will well repay the outlay. This will be about 1s. 6d. to each plot of 144 square yards. Manures containing much nitrogen, such as nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia, and the dung from animals, are rather inclined to promote the growth of coarser grasses. As our object in fowl plots is quality, and not quantity, none of these should be used. On soils approaching a sandy nature, better results will be obtained by using mineral superphosphate of lime (usually called superphosphate), and some form of potash, probably kainit. Strong soils are rarely short of potash, while light soils invariably are. Three hundredweight of kainit to the acre (about 10 lbs. to 144 square yards) applied in autumn on a chalk or limestone soil, and not later than February on sandy soil, followed by five hundredweight of superphosphate in March or April, will have the best effect. Basic slag, a slow acting manure, should be applied in November. The result of these applications will be a rich growth of clover of such high quality that the birds will eat it ravenously, consuming twice as much as they would of inferior grasses.

For variety almost any kind of garden stuff we eat ourselves may be given occasionally. I have heard others say that cabbage given ad lib. will injure hens and taint eggs. That has not been my experience. The grass in poultry runs should be kept short, as the herbage will be much finer. When there is a quiet pony that will stay in wire, this is the best means of keeping down the grass. I have one, and she is invaluable, grazing in the pens all day perfectly contented. True, she had a lesson in her early days, and was once well wrapped up in wire-netting after an attempt to break out. But any horse can be trained to graze tethered to an iron bar driven into the ground, and this is the best plan for a time, until they recognize the poultry runs as a grazing ground, and the wire as a fence to be dreaded. Of all stock, horses prefer grazing after fowls, a fact I mentioned in "Poultry" many years ago. A few weeks since I was at Mr. Astley's poultry farm at King's Norton, and found sheep grazing in his pens. I have never tried sheep, having a notion that they would not thrive, but Mr. Astley, who is a butcher in a large way of business, and therefore should know, told me that the sheep did well and fattened very well there. The small poultry-keeper with no large live stock might keep rabbits in wire-bottomed runs to eat the surplus grass. Rabbits pay well under these conditions. Belgian does crossed with the Flemish answer better than most.

If the manured grass plots are kept short with a lawn-mower, only used when the grass is about three inches high, and only one-half of the run cut at a time, care must be taken to remove all the lawn clippings, as the fowls pick them up in a half-dried state, and frequently get blocked crops. In dry weather to sweep the runs occasionally with a yard brush is a great help toward keeping them sweet. Nothing purifies a run and removes poultry taint like shutting up the run and allowing a crop to grow up for hay. When these sheds and runs are used for breeding pens the hens can often be turned into a grass-field about May-day. The cocks can be shut in the scratching-sheds entirely, and by the end of June a full crop of hay may be mown. The run is then practically as clean as if no birds had been on, and will serve for two more years. When this cannot be done a dressing of cold air-slaked lime in November, and a sprinkling of salt in February, will be of service. On most soils mushrooms spring up after the use of salt alone, but if a little mushroom spawn is used in addition a crop is a certainty. These must be gathered early in the morning before the hens are let out in the sheds, as fowls are fond of them.

In summer I like the hens to be let out early, not later than 6 a. m., for about two hours. A late-rising poultry-keeper can open the doors at night after the birds are at roost, and they will then be out at peep of day and ready to feed and shut up again as soon as he is about. An hour's run just before dusk may also be given. In winter, during bad weather the birds may be kept in wholly, but unless in wet or windy weather a run out for two hours during the sunniest part of the day will be better.

The earth floor of the scratching shed littered a few inches deep with straw may be kept clean for a long time by sprinkling with a disinfectant such as creolin and water once a week. Where this is not done the litter should be well shaken over once a week, and all dust and droppings swept out. When foul, the shed may be cleaned right out and fresh straw put in. Even then the litter will be useful in pig-styes. With long wheat straw a depth of three inches will be sufficient. With shorter litter such as cavings or rowings (the short broken straw from a threshing machine) a depth of six inches may be used.

The grit trough is best nailed on to the inside of the shed about a foot from the ground. Flint, granite screenings, broken crockery and the like will serve for the hard grit, but I like fowls to have oyster shell ad lib. If given mixed in the trough about two-thirds shell to one-third hard grit will be required. The water vessel is best kept on a box about fifteen inches high, well out of reach of the scratching litter, and should be emptied and cleansed daily. In very cold weather a dash of warm in it will prevent the water from freezing too soon.

I like fowls in confinement to have soft food once a day in moderation. A heavy breakfast is a mistake, as it makes the birds lazy for the rest of the morning and prevents them taking scratching exercise. This is best supplied cold in summer and slightly warm in winter. If given scalding hot the fowls suffer a reaction afterwards and feel the cold more. Soft food should always be given to laying stock as crumbly as possible, using only enough water to moisten the mass. In fact it is not possible to mix soft food properly without turning it out on to a mixing-board and rubbing some flour in by hand. As soon as the light breakfast is eaten the birds may have a handful of grain to five thrown into the litter. This will keep them busy for an hour or two, when more may be given. The full feed of grain should be given quite two hours before dusk to allow the birds ample time to find it. When a small poultry-keeper is away the whole day the best plan is to push the straw into a heap in one corner and scatter plenty of grain well through it. It will take the fowls must of the day to scratch this down and work it back across the shed.

With a breeding pen it is an excellent plan to let the cock out by himself for an hour a day and give him plenty of good food. At the same time, he does not suffer nearly so much in a scratching-shed as when the food is thrown down on a bare floor. In the latter case he is often doing the polite until half the food is eaten. I think it is due to this that I had not to move a cock from a pen through weakness all last season. Birds in confinement are always better for a dose of Epsom Salts once a week—say an ounce to ten hens. The livers will keep clean and the eggs be more fertile.—Poultry, England.

TIMONIUM, MD.

The poultry display in connection with the Maryland Hati and Baltimore County Agricultural Society fair, last week, was the best the society has had for years. Strongest class was the White Wyandottes, Polish and Hamburg classes, also well represented. All Asiatic breeds were shown. Leghorns, all varieties shown S. C. Brown's leading in numbers and quality. The pen display was unusually good for the early season. Weather was very hot and sultry and specimens suffered with the heat. Bantams and pigeons were out in numbers. The new poultry house proved to be entirely too small, and compelled the superintendent to tier coops so high a ladder was necessary to do the judging. As none of the airships were in working condition, visitors are still wondering what was in the top coops. Mr. Jas. Phipps was superintendent and the birds were will cared for and it is a wonder he was able to classify the display as well as he did. Among the pricipal exhibitors were Hoke & Son, Bill, J. H. Mirring, Mrs. Wm. Minnick. Judging was completed the first day. Some of the winners will probably be at Hagerstown.

Evansville Poultry and Pigeon Show.

The Evansville Poultry and Pigeon Association will hold its second annual exhibition at Evansville, Ind., Jan. 7-12, 1907.

S. B. Johnson, Fairland, Ind., will judge the poultry and George Ewald, Cincinnati, O., will judge the pigeons.

The association owns its own pigeon coops and any stock sent will be well cared for.

For premium list and further information, address the secretary, H. J. Reimer, No. 113 Heinlein avenue, Evansville, Ind.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN!

This is to certify that I hereby sell all right, title, and interest in my entire stock of Black Cochin Bantams to Frank C. Fehrs, of Mt. Vernon, New York, for a consideration this day in hand, this sale to include all my New York, Stamford, and Hartford Winners without reserve.

JAMES B. N. FITCH,
Mt. Vernon, New Yo.

We publish in this issue the awards at the Taunton Fair, as predicted the quality was of a high order.

Dragoon and Homer classes filled remarkably well, 162 entries in the Homer classes made a grand display. Thanks to the specials, and interest shown by the Homer Club.

The Dragoon Club offered a fine club special and had a good effect, shown by the competition in the different classes provided for this variety.

The Specialty Clubs, by offering specials at the different exhibitions are the means of bringing out a goodly number in their varieties, thereby attracting attention and causing a demand for so popular a breed.

This always brings new members to the ranks. The new members are the ones that generally keep the club alive.

The Great Hagerstown Fair, October 9-12, is another fixture, where pigeons play a prominent part. The premium list is out and shows a most extended classification, something which appeals to the American fancy, although oftimes we believe to extend as the competition in some classes show. The entry is 50 cents per bird; $2.00 first, and $1.00 second. And together with these inducements, Messrs. Ewald and Stanton, the "heavy weights" of the pigeon fancy, to act as judges.

For premium list, address W. F. Spahr, Hagerstown, Md.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 10, all fanciers fortunate enough to be at Hagerstown, will enjoy the banquet and the parade. The pigeon regiment will be commanded by Col. Ewald and Major Stanton.

The Canadian National Exhibition held at Toronto, had a most successful pigeon entry, over 1,000 birds on exhibition. Complete lists of awards will be published in the next issue.

Will Schock, the hustling secretary of the Western Fantail Club, is working hard in the interest of the club to bring a big entry of fantails to Chicago. And as reports show the western breeders have had a most successful season, we look for a great show in Fantail Alley.

The Eastern Fantail Club will hold its eleventh annual meeting at Madison Square Garden, and will offer a great list of specials, amounting to over $300.

H. M. Pockman will judge the classes this season.

We understand Mr. Samuel Johnson will be asked again to judge the Fantail classes at Boston. Mr. Johnson was the means of bringing out a grand display last year, in fact we never remember seeing a finer lot than Boston caged.

The Eastern Fantail Club will offer club gold medal for the best fantail in the show.

The flying season may now be said to be vertually over for 1906, and we would impress upon the minds of all young flying fanciers that while the winter season is viewed by many as one of rest to both birds and owners, yet the true fancier can still find an abundance of matter connected with his hobby of special interest and instruction to occupy his mind and leisure, even if his birds are rightfully enjoying a season of rest and enter freedom from work.

In fact the true flying fancier may be said to be always on the go, and when the season of breeding and training is at an end, while very many in the sport regard their personal labors and interest also at an end for the year, the genuine fancier does not accept any such immunity from duty and interest, but finds an endless variety of interesting subjects for consideration.

One of the chief subjects that should now occupy the mind of the fancier is the question of thinning down his stock. Better dispose of all those you don't intend to breed another season, than overcrowd your stock during the fall and winter season.

THE TAUNTON SHOW R

Monday morning, September 3rd, with 738 entries in the pigeon classes, which was remarkable for the quality and condition at this time of the year.

Dragoons, Nems, Helmets, Swallow and Oriental classes were very strong. Homers were a show in themselves, 162 entries, quality throughout was fine. The judging in the Homer section was done by W. A. Hersey, secretary of the Homer Club and performed his task in a masterly way.

THE WESTERN FANTAIL CLUB.

Fantails galore! From all reports this has been a great year for them, so now to the Fantail Club.

Don't whatever you do, keep all those birds at home.

Join the Western Fantail Club and show a few.

Bear in mind our last grand Fantail meet at Chicago, 1906, and get in with us. The cost is $1.00. Dr. Hattan, our amiable president, has his challenge cup to offer again this meet to be won twice for best young Fantail in show (bred by exhibitors).

I had the honor of winning same last year and I hope some one will tie me for it this time.

Our list of cups, specials, etc., will be a splendid one, and it is up to you to bag a few. The membership to date is not an enormous one, but those we have are all energetic hustling fanciers.

If we don't make the Western Fantail Club a leader among the specialty clubs before next season closes it won't be for lack of trying. The boys deserve a great deal of credit for the interest they have taken in the clubs' affairs. I would like to have all club dues in before the end of September. Any new members contemplating joining would do well to write me at once. It is to your advantage to join before our new list is made up. Who's next?

WILL SCHOCK, Secretary.

Seems Good to Him.

To The American Fancier:

It seems good to get the Fancier in the good old way, and there is but one "American Fancier," and that is when "Drev" is the Editor. We hope that all the cranks in hendom will do their little bit to push a good thing along.

Yours truly.

HOMING PIGEONS.

A clean dry spacious loft. Necessary Food and the proper care of the young birds.

Although homing pigeons are the most interesting and attractive of all birds that are possessed of strong domestic tendencies and attachments, so little is known concerning their habits and requirements that the average householder hesitates about venturing to establish a loft of his own. The comparatively few who have done so find in their swift and graceful flyers a never-failing source of delight. It is not necessary to be a professional fancier or a member of a homing club to successfully raise and train homing pigeons. Their study and care can and ought to rank among the most charming recreations of country or suburban life, while even in cities valuable flocks may be and are maintained.

Fascinating, indeed, such birds become after a very slight acquaintance with them. The growth of their individual characteristics—almost as distinct and varied as is the human family—their marked intelligence, their high and long circling sweeps as they grow old enough to test their wings; then their first "toss," a few miles from home, and the gradual lengthening of the tossing distance, until the day comes when the miles, multiplied by hundreds if you wish it so, seem never too many to keep the swift and strong and tireless flyers from making a direct and lightning-like course to the one spot on earth which they love because it is their only home—all these things make homing pigeon culture a pursuit which grows in interest with every additional day.

IT IS A PURSUIT

which may be advantageously taken up by the young people of any family whose home is so arranged that a loft will not be in the way.

The loft is easily constructed. It may be built out of doors, or a corner of a barn or shed or garret may be wired off for the purpose. Some of the most expensive lofts in the United States are built upon the flat roofs of city homes. A loft six feet square and six or seven feet high will comfortably accommodate forty birds and would not be too large for a beginner's few pairs of young birds.

Nothing is worse for homing pigeons than overcrowding, and it is just as easy at the start to construct a spacious loft as to build one that will soon prove too small. Still more important is it to see that your loft is free from draughts and dampness. Attention to details of this kind at the beginning is the best kind of insurance against bird diseases in the flock you hope to own. With the loft dry and free from draughts no artificial heat in winter is required. Indeed, it should be avoided.

or expensive, according to taste. A single enclosure could be made almost without expense, by any clever boy or young man of mechanical skill. Shelves, divided into compartments, should be placed along the walls for future nesting, and such compartment should have one-half of its front, enclosed for homing pigeons, when nesting, appreciate privacy. Perches, pegs and small platforms can be placed about the loft as the owner pleases. Some, of course, are necessary.

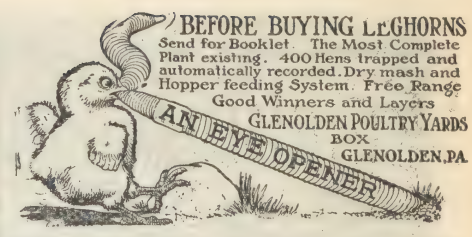
The home prepared, it is time to look for its occupants. A single pair of young pigeons may be bought, but it is better to purchase several pairs. If you want a large flock the best plan at beginning is to purchase about six pairs of young pigeons, and instead of dealing with a single fancier get the birds from two or three good, reliable fanciers in the neighborhood. You can buy young homing pigeons at $2 a pair, but it is much more satisfactory to tell your fancier that you want birds from the best strains obtainable.

At $5 a pair you can buy first-class record birds, with guaranteed pedigrees. The young of record makers are always good birds, but it is still better to get birds whose elder brothers or sisters have also made good records. Then you are doubly sure of having pigeons you will yet be proud of. Sometimes a loft is started by buying two or three pairs of old birds that have bred record birds. Then if the young get lost or killed, in their first outing—as sometimes happens—you still have the breeders. They must, however, be kept always to the loft, for once outside they would fly directly to their old home. Good breeders, too, are sufficiently costly to discourage beginners. I know that some could not be bought at any price. If you want them, however, and can obtain them, get them pretty soon, for February is nesting time.

IF YOU HAVE PURCHASED

young birds they will be about five weeks old when introduced to your loft. Within a week or ten days they will be flying about outside and getting familiar with their surroundings. The cleanliness of the loft must be regarded from the beginning as a matter of supreme importance. The loft should be thoroughly cleaned at least once every week. Pigeon owners who clean their lofts every day say that their birds are much healthier and stronger for it. It is certain that a foul loft soon breeds vermin and disease. Plenty of fresh drinking water and a spacious, clean bathing tub are among the absolute necessities of the loft.

Washed sand, oyster shells, and salt, mixed, constitute an important item of pigeon food, and should always be accessible to the birds. The mixture is generally placed in a small box in the loft. Occasionally the addition of a little cayenne pepper is beneficial. For general sustenance have an assortment of the best quality of feed, consisting of old, small round corn—old it should be always—small white Canada peas and oat grits. These can be obtained in quantities from any fancier. If possible, too, add vetches to the assortment. Vetches are small black beans imported from Belgium, and considered by many of the crack pigeon flyers to be a most beneficial article of bird food. Vetches in this country can generally be obtained from seedsmen, and often from pigeon fanciers. Now and then the pigeons will enjoy a mixture of hemp, canary and rape seed, and will be better for it.



With wholesome food, plenty of drinking and bathing water, and a clean, dry, spacious loft, the young birds will thrive; and daily open air exercise will strengthen their wings and give them confidence in their abilities. Let them have plenty of exercise flying around their home and some bright day, when they are about four months' old, take them about two miles from home in a basket and give them their first "toss." You probably could go five miles in safety, but it is just as well to be satisfied with two at the start. See that the birds are released in an open space—not necessarily elevated—and that no telegraph wires are directly above to check their upward flight.

THEY WILL SPEEDILY FIND

the way to their loft and soon afterward a five-mile toss may be made and then a ten-mile toss and so on, until some day, perhaps, if you keep up the practice to that extent, one of your birds becomes a record-breaker and flies 500 miles between dawn and dusk. If long distance homes have no temptation for you, the short-distance homeward flights of your flock will afford yourself and your friends much pleasure. An ordinary crabbing net or a muslin net with a handle, kept in a loft will be found useful when you desire to catch particular birds for a trip. Sometimes in a fog or in a storm you will lose a bird—generally a young bird. With hawks and gunners prowling about even old birds are not always safe.

Most fanciers as winter approaches, run a wire netting through the center of the loft, and separate the male birds from the females. In February the wire is taken down and the birds are united. Earthen pans or bowls are set in the shelves for the nests, which are constructed of straw and hay, mingled with tobacco stems to keep out the vermin. Here again cleanliness is always a chief consideration. The hen bird lays just two eggs and her young are generally a cock and a hen—sometimes two hens, but that is rare. It occasionally happens that old birds neglect their young. That is generally the result in parents'illness. In such acase it is not unusual for some other mother bird in the loft to adopt one or two extra young pigeons and nurse them as though they were her own.

Nurse them? Yes, it can be fairly said that pigeons nurse their young. Before the young birds are hatched the setting hen begins to retain food in her crop. There it undergoes a softening process until it becomes almost as milk. When the birds are hatched the mother raises this semi-liquid to her mouth, and with her bill passes her own sustenance into the wide open mouths of her hungry, helpless little ones. This is continued for a week, the mother's food each day growing a little harder, until at last the young birds can pick up for themselves, and digest grain food.

ALL THIS, AS CAN BE READILY appreciated, must be deblilitating to mother bird, and the tenderest care and the most nutritious food are necessary for the food of herself and her young. There are, nevertheless, some pigeon owners who so utterly fail to comprehend this as to fly mother birds in races during the period when they should be feeding their young. This may or may not be cruelty to the old bird, her unimpaired strength being certainly needed for either racing or nursing purposes alone. It must be detrimental to the young birds at a very susceptible and critical time of their lives.

This, fortunately, is now generally understood by pigeon raisers although there was a time, not so very long ago, when the influences of the health of the mother bird on its young was not clearly recognized. Newly- hatched birds for example, are sometimes afflicted with canker in the throat. That used to be taken as an indication that the little victim's blood was in a bad condition and the young bird was treated while the old hen was ignored. Pigeon fanciers who keep up with the times and do a little thinking for themselves, now realize when canker in the throat appears in a young bird that the mother bird's stomach is out of order and that consequently the food supply for the young is impure and somewhat poisonous.

Preliminary care and cleanliness will nearly always keep your birds in good condition, but if disease of any kind, should appear in the loft, and you are still inexperienced, don't depend on published articles for ready-made cures. Consult some experienced breeder or bird fancier, in whom you have confidence, and follow his directions in the treatment of your birds. After a time you will know just how to act on your own responsibility in any emergency.

The best birds, most fanciers believe, come from the March hatching, and these are always the most sought for. The old birds are always the for. The old birds are permitted, however, to breed until May, and are then put in training for the racing season, which usually begins in the middle of that month. It would be advisable, before a catching, to write to David S. Rogers, of Philadelphia, the present Race Secretary of the Federation of American Homing Pigeon Fanciers, and order an officially registered seemless band, or metal ring, for each young bird looked for.

Each band will be properly lettered and numbered and the letter and number will be registered in a book with the name of the owner opposite. Four days after the bird is hatched the ring is slipped over one of its feet and allowed to remain on the leg. Within two weeks the foot will have grown so that it will be impossible to remove the band, and during the bird's lifetime it will remain on the leg, without injuring it in any way. Should you then at any time desire to make a record for one of your birds over one of the numerous recognized long or short distance courses, or over any course that can be easily and accurately measured, you write to the racing secretary at least two weeks in advance of the proposed flight, giving the letter and number of the bird and the starting point.

A RACING REPRESENTATIVE nected with a neighboring homing club will be assigned to the starting point and another representative will watch at the home loft. Thus the flight can be accurately timed, and if a new record is made it will be officially placed to your bird's credit. Even should you not care to fly your birds for records you will find the registered leg bands useful, for some birds will at times go astray, or get wounded, or become exhausted, and the registered leg band will enable the finder to ascertain the whereabouts of the rightful owner. An honorable pigeon fancier or loft owner will always go out of his way to see that such a bird gets safely home.

The speed of a homing pigeon depends on the wind, the atmosphere, and the condition of the bird. It often happens that a bird in good condition, with the atmosphere clear, and with a good stiff wind behind them, can make from 1,500 yards to one mile a minute. There are always some birds that can make five hundred miles in the sunlight of a single day. If tried at a longer distances, though, they wander, and rest, and find their home, if at all, with much difficulty, and after many days.

SEASONABLE HINTS CAGE BIRDS.

By Rosslyn Mannering.

The moult is now occupying the attention of everyone; and well it may, for it is without doubt one of the most important events in the lives of our birds, and, as such, it demands our careful attention.

It is the aim of every experienced fancier to get his charges through the moult as quickly as possible, for a good, quick moult means, as a rule, sound health during the ensuing year.

Do not imagine that by a "quick" moult I mean a forced moult. No! when a bird keeps in comparatively good health at this time of the year and casts its feathers freely without any artificial assistance, otherwise "forcing," having been resorted to, it may be said to be undergoing a good quick moult.

The system known as forcing or "stop" moulting, practised by many bird-catchers for the sake of getting their call-birds into song at an unusual season of the year, can only be condemned utterly as wholly fatal to soundness of constitution. It is only when a bird has "stuck" in the moult or when the moult does not appear likely to take place at all that I recommend you to resort to such extreme measures. In such a case it is practically the only method of saving the patient's life.

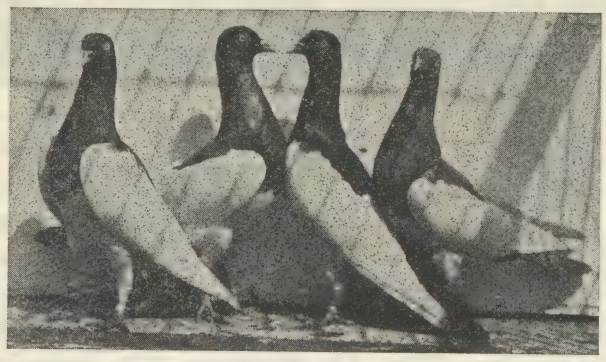
The plan generally adopted by the bird catcher is, I believe, to put the bird into a small "back" cage, wrap the cage up in a thick cloth, and neglect to clean it out. The tail and flight feathers are also pulled out by hand. Naturally, this method does not improve the health of the bird, and many perish under the ordeal.

The fancier will find that the desired object is gained just as quickly by placing the bird in an ordinary living cage; covering this latter with a fairly thick and dark cloth and keeping the patient in a warm, one might also say, in a very warm room. The tail feathers may be easily abstracted by catching them between the thumb and forefinger and letting the bird fly, "leaving its tail behind it." The drinking water should be coloured a deep orange colour by means of saffron shreds. Such treatment will generally start off even the most obstinate cases, and the ill effects will be only very slight if careful after-treatment is observed.

If a bird sits and mopes very much at this season of the year, and does not cast any of its feathers after a day or two has elapsed, you may pretty surely conclude that the above extreme measures are warranted.

At all times draughts are to be dreaded, but if a bird is exposed to their baleful influence during the moult, the danger is very much greater than it would be at any other time.

A few shreds of saffron or four or five drops of tincture of steel in the drinking water two or three times a week will prove beneficial. A small piece of sulphate of iron about the size of a split pea will serve the same purpose, viz., to tone up the system and assist in the casting of the old coat The traditional rusty nail is about as useless as the proverbial spittal.



The flowers of the nusturtium, or as it is more familiarly called in the North, the "Indian Cress,' are also an excellent tonic and bracer up of the system. They are eagerly eaten by most small seed-eaters, and they are rich in colouring matter.

I have supplied them regularly to my own birds at the moulting season for the past five or six years, and have always found that their effects were good.

The bath and plenty of fresh air are two other important adjuncts to the successful moult. It must be remembered, however, that birds of colour, i. e., Norwich, London Fancy, Lizard, and Cinnamon Canaries, etc., as well as a few British Softbills and some Foreigners, must not be exposed to too strong sunlight, else their colours will lose their beauty and have the "edge" taken off them. Such birds are best moulted in spacious cages in a room. The window should have a tinted blind, say of a buff or yellow colour, which should be kept drawn when the sunlight is very strong. Unless you live in a very smoky manufacturing center, I do not consider the system known as "shutting down" either advisable or necessary.

This "shutting down" consists in covering the cage or tier of cages occupied by the special birds with a clean white linen sheet in order to protect them from dust, draughts and soot, in which object it succeeds; but it is apt to make the birds timid and nervous, and very liable to catch a chill when placed (unavoidably) in a more exposed situation at a show.

The usual weekly cleaning may be foregone during the moult. Experience teaches us that the less the birds are disturbed the more freely will they don their new coats. Therefore be-plainly. Many otherwise good pullets fail sadly on the upper part of the breast; they go "shafty," or "horse-shoey," or even show patches of white. The first thing I always look at in a "Chitty" pullet is the tail. This cannot be too finely and evenly barred; and wherever one finds a first-class tail the rest of the bird will usually be all that one can desire. A winner at one of our big shows is now well night absolute perfection.

"Chitties" breed marvellously true, if of the right sort, so that the breeder may always be sure of a few good ones, and one need not breed a great lot to get them. The neck should be snow white; the comb small and neat, and the ears round, smooth, and perfectly white. The eye is big and dark brown and rather prominent, especially in the cock. For those about to take up a new breed I can confidently recommend "Chitties." They are lovely to look at, very small eaters, will live in a little run, and they are everlasting layers. The chickens, if well done to, are very good to rear, and they mature quicker than any breed I know. They will not stand bad ventilation and dirt; but then, very few birds will. Buy some good stuff to start with, and you will soon be at the top of the tree; and when once there, you can keep there.

To The American Fancier:

The American Fancier is the ONLY paper to advertise in. It has sold me birds and eggs over fourteen hundred dollars worth. The only reason I stopped my advertisement was that it was selling me out too fast. Have shipped eggs to every State in the Union; also, several lots to Canada. Wishing you success, and long life to the eagle, I am,

Most truly yours,

The Latest and Best Book on Success With Poultry is

999 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

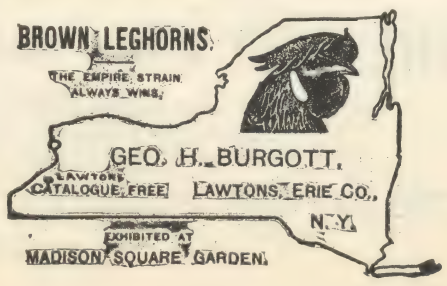
The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.



Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

New Prairie State Brooder No. 5

As arranged in Long Brooder House

This is the most economical and successful indoor brooding device ever offered poultry raisers, and is particularly adapted to long brooder houses. Not only possesses all the points claimed for a pipe system,—that of overhead heat with cool floor,—but it does not have any of the disadvantages of such a system. The New No. 5 Prairie State Brooders are perfectly sanitary, from the fact that every part is instantly accessible and removable and may be taken out of doors and purified in the sun. This feature, together with perfect ventilation, eliminates diarrhoea and other germ diseases that carry off so many chicks, the cause of which is the irregular heat and poor ventilation with the unsanitary conditions usually found in the pipe brooder.

The busy poultryman will appreciate this brooder as a labor-saver. The upper case is instantly removable, permitting the entire bottom of brooder to be cleaned with a broom. The lamp, chicks and feeding may also be attended to from the alley. In fact, it is not necessary to enter the pen to care for the brooder. Tell us your troubles and write for further information.

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

VOLUME XXVI — OSSINING, N. Y., SEPTEMBER 22, 1906 — No. 669

(By B. J. Hill, Associate Editor.)

Mr. Julius Franks, of Sherbondy, Ohio, who was christened by our old friend "Zim" some years ago, "The German Baron," is undoubtedly to-day as he has been for years, the Hamburg King of this continent. He has bred all varieties of Hamburgs for a lifetime, and he has been a constant winner at the big shows, East and West. The writer saw at his plant a few days ago, scores of young birds in shape for the early shows, and many more that are maturing finely for later exhibits. Mr. Franks, a few years ago purchased the entire stock of Gold Coin strain of Buff Rocks; and more recently has added Polish and Polish Bantams, and several of the variety Bantams, among which may be mentioned, Light Brahma Bantams, that in hackle and toe-feathering are simply fine. This plant is a paradise in the way of small and tree fruits, making ideal conditions for poultry raising.

Mr. Scott Billman, the well-known Brown Leghorn breeder of Worcester, Ohio, has purchased a beautiful home on the trolley between Cuyahoga Falls and Kent, Ohio. He is very busily engaged at present in putting his plant in shape for next year's business. Mr. Billman has been rather an extensive exhibitor in the past and has always been very successful in landing some of the blue at the large shows. He is adding Barred Rocks making pullet matings exclusively. Mr. Billman has used trap-nests from the time they were first adopted, and is a pedigree breeder in the fullest sense of the word. A large farm has also been furnished, which will supply the grain, and also afford free range for some of the stock.

Two years ago, W. W. and J. B. Patton began the building of a poultry plant at Kent, Ohio, and during this time, more progress has been made than very often is done in five years. It is beautifully located on a slight elevation just outside of the city. There are six large houses and though the hundreds of birds were in full moult, they were as slick and clean as they could be, in strong contrast to many plants this time of the year. The whole place in every detail is this way, which speaks volumes of the efficiency of the Superintendent, Mr. Holcumb, who has been with the plant from the start. Out-door brooders are used each in a yard about the size of a city lot. Everywhere, they are covered with clover. They have over a thousand head of the best S. C. White Leghorns I have seen this year to sell. They look as if they began to grow the day they were hatched and never stopped. They have also quite a bunch of Columbian Wyandottes, but will sell more this year as they have great faith in the future of this breed. Messrs. Patton can feel proud of the progress they have made, and the fancy is to be congratulated on their having entered the ranks of breeders.

Goss and Ewing are old-time breeders of Light Brahmas exclusively, and their young stock is fully up to the high standard which they have demonstrated by their winnings at the larger shows in the past. When I called on this firm at their place in Edinburg, Ohio, Mr. Goss was looking over a lot of yearling females that were nearly moulted out, ready for sales this fall. We do not believe there is anyone more particular about the individual merit of each bird in their breeding pens, and any bird this firm keeps over is worthy of a place in any breeder's yard.

The mammoth egg plant of N. C. Collins at Rootstown has been sold to Mr. Spellman of Cleveland, Ohio, who will take charge this week.

JULIUS FRANK'S POULTRY YARDS.

D. K. Moser, chief of the fire department, of Warren, Ohio, was just bringing his young stock in from the country when I called on him. He farms all his young stock out to obtain the benefits of free range. Mr. Moser is very strong in Black Monorca and White Wyandottes, but he is going to dispose of all these birds about November 1st, to make room for Partridge Wyandottes, which he will breed exclusively in the future, and of which he has a nice bunch very strong in breast and back coloring.

Mrs. Frank Metchalf of Warren, Ohio, president of the National Feather Club, can be very proud of her vast flock of Buckeyes of which she is the sole and undisputed originator. Mrs. Metcalf's first idea was to secure a bird that would excel in egg production and vigor. She has succeeded in this and has at the same time, produced a really beautiful show bird. Mrs. Metcalf has enjoyed a large sale the past season and her very successful hatching and brooding during the past summer places her in a position to handle with satisfaction the increased demand warranted by the merit of her breed. Mrs. Metcalf is a splendid entertainer and the writer never enjoyed an afternoon better than this visit to the Red Feather Farm.

Mr. F. S. Hawn has secured an ideal location for his new poultry plant just on the City line of Youngstown, Ohio. It is located on two side hills made picturesque by the building of a spring-fed artificial pond on which he has placed a splendid flock of Pekin Ducks. While Mr. Hawn has a few Buff Rocks of quality, his main stock will consist of White Wyandottes and Single Comb White Leghorns, and of these two breeds, he has several hundred youngsters rapidly shaping into show birds. The birds in the breeding pens are typical in shape and good color. Mr. Hawn has worked up a private and club trade for broilers, so that he has to cull closer than most breeders do, all to the advantage of his customers for stock.

There is an unusual item among the exhibits in the Poultry Department at the Ohio State Fair this week. A six-month pullet hovering a bunch of chicks. It is a Buckeye, owned by Mrs. Metcalf, who stole her nest under a building and hatched every egg. This explodes the theory that the first eggs laid by a pullet are always infertile.

The Pittsburg Fancier's Club will during the week of February 18-25 hold a show that will surpass all former successful shows. The fire that destroyed the Old Market House, last February, compelling the Club to cancel the 1906 show, was the cause of bitter dissapointment both to the club and to the fanciers who have for years exhibited there. The next show is intended to take the place of both. Superintendent James Skiles assures us it will be a two-ring show in every sense of the phrase.

The old hall is being re-built and by leaving out the stage and the rooms formerly back of the stage, the floor space will be greatly increased. During the past few years every indication points towards the next one being a climax. Messrs. McClave and Brown have already been engaged to judge, and it is expected that Sharpe Butterfield will also be secured. As they have not yet been able to hear from him, Mr. Hilldorfer is contemplating a Lost, Strayed, or Stolen from him.

Mr. Hilldorffer had the misfortune to break two bones of his foot, but you can't kill the Dutch and they only succeeded in keeping him in the hospital four hours. He attended to business every day first on crutches, and now with a cane. The same officers still hold good. G. Wash. Moore, president; Ed. Seldon, vice-president; Geo. Sutch, secretary- treasurer; Superintendent James Skiles; Superintendent of Poultry Ed. Selden; Superintendent of Pigeons Thos. Best; Show Committee, the above with Messrs. Foster, Randolph and Hilldorffer.

The show will be largely cooped with newly purchased Empires. At least, twenty cups will be offered this year, and the beauty about the Pittsburg prizes is that there are never any strings attached.

BLACK JAVAS.

Black Javas originated some years ago in Missouri, no one knows precisely how. A doctor made and kept a breed for many years, but would not sell an egg or a fowl to any one. A servant was prevailed upon to steal some eggs for a friend, and from these eggs the breed was disseminated. They are a large, glossy black fowl with single comb, red wattle and earlobes, black or willow legs and yellow feet. It is a fine table fowl and hardy.

JAMES RANKIN'S EGG FOOD.

Ten pounds best ground beef scrap, five pounds fine ground bone, two pounds granulated charcoal or powdered charcoal, one pound sulphur, two ounces cayenne pepper, four ounces salt. One quart of this mixture to every 100 fowls given in soft food will produce most excellent results.

NEW YORK STATE FAIR.

(Special Report by George W. Weed.)

If a grand exhibit, absence of rain, and attendance up almost to the six figure mark, means a success, then the State Fair, just held at Syracuse, N. Y., was one. But—and there is a "but" and it is too bad that there should be one, for, with the very able attendants, and exhibit of quantity and quality, and showed in the best of coops, they have not half building room enough to show them in. Coops piled three and four high, with two, and in some cases, more in a coop shows how badly this department was cramped for room. It was utterly impossible to get any conception of the Hall from any one point of view from the floor; each aisle was simply walled in by coops at least ten feet high. I surely did not envy the judges their task.

I arrived at the Poultry building about noon of Wednesday, and after a hard squeeze in the sweltering crowd of humanity that crowded the aisles, I got to the Superintendent's office. After a handsake with Mr. Jaquins, I was introduced to Dr. John Hurdis, his able assistant, and right here I wish to thank these two gentlemen as well as their very able attendants for their kindness and courtesy. They seemed ubiquitous in their endeavors to make it pleasant for the poultry press, exhibitor, visitor, in fact, all that wanted information.

The birds and exhibitors. It will be impossible to give a detailed description of the different varieties for the aisles were literally packed from early morn until closing-up time at night. In fact, the crowds would have to be driven out at closing-up time.

I was fortunate enough to meet a few fanciers, and get a line on a few of the birds, and I want those not mentioned to understand that it is not intended as a slight. To commence, one of the most pleased men in the building was Mr. J. S. Martin of Port Dover, Canada, who came with a string of White Wyandottes that would not be denied winning all firsts besides other premiums. A fine lot, and if we don't miss our guess will be heard from at some of the best winter shows.

Buff Wyandottes had for some of the competitors such breeders as R. B. Robbins, C. P. Dewitt, J. H. Scott, which means quality.

The next breeder who had the courage to face the crowd to show his pets was E. D. Pierson, who thinks R. C. Brown Leghorns are good enough for him.

Dr. E. Whittier thinks the same of Whites, and he certainly has the goods. W. A. Shafer, whom I had the pleasure of competing against some fifteen years ago with his long string, F. G. Bean, who breeds and shows some of the best, E. E. Winchell, the able manager of Pine Top Poultry Farm, with a fine string in fine condition, Blunck, Oliver, Burn, Coughtry, Edgewood Farm, but I cannot name them all.

What they need is about four times the building space or rather floor room. The coops cannot be improved upon; Mr. Wemple, who I think is one of the busiest men, is kept busy certainly to fill the firm's many orders not only for Fairs and Shows, but there is hardly a fancier of any note who has not one or more sections of the Empire Coops for fitting up purposes. The awards follow:

EARLY DERBY GAMES.

It is doubtful if there ever lived a more active and ardent cocker than the old Earl of Derby, who, in his long life of eighty years, fought scores of great mains against the principal English cockers. His love of this exciting sport was as great in his old age as in his youthful days. Although one of the most powerful of English noblemen, and a millionaire in wealth, possessing fine race horses, hunters and staghounds, he preferred in his leisure hours to witness a well-contested main, in which his ablest birds were engaged, to any other form of sport. At the present time, English, Irish and American cockers are well content with mains of from nine to seventeen battles, but in those days a great main lasted for two or three days, from thirty-one to fifty-one battles being fought.

The old Earl possessed the champion strain of the time, a family of bright, black-breasted reds, with pearly white legs and beaks. They were all of rather light weight, being, like all true pit games, more heavily feathered and shorter legged than the high class show games of the present time.

There have been many disputes, at least on this side of the Atlantic, regarding the color of the Earl Derby games. Dr. Cooper claims that there are silver, gray and yellow-legged Derbys, but gives no reasonable grounds for such an assertion. That Lord Derby possessed greys, and, for that matter, games of many other colors during his long experience, is very likely; but to call al. of these varieties Derbys would be an absurdity. It is certain that the Earl's favorites were white-legged black reds, and during the last years of his life, he rarely if ever fought any others.

The Rev. Mr. Dixon, in his old English work on poultry, gives the most reliable account of Derbys to be found in any poultry book. Mr. Dixon lived in the central part of England, and visited Lord Derby's great estate in Lanchashire on several occasions. At the first visit, the great fancier had been dead but a few years, and several fine breeding stocks were still kept on the estate and in the vicinity. Mr. Dixon distinctly states that they were white-legged black reds, and mentions no other variety.

During the Earl's long life-time, all the best runs for miles were occupied by birds of this magnificent breed, and several hundred stags were bred yearly to replace those that fell in battle. Two of the most skillful handlers and trainers of the time were retained in the Earl's employ, and private mains, the winners of which were selected for the public ones, were frequently fought at Knowsley. On one of these occasions, a cock of the white-legged breed was pitted against seven others on the same day and defeated them all. So said old Thomas Roscoe, the game keeper to Mr. Dixon. The incredulous should bear in mind that this was related as the greatest exploit in cock-fighting ever seen at Knowsley, where this amusement was freely indulged in for more than half a century. Silver spurs, about two inches in length, were in general use at this time. Lord Sefton, who was one of Lord Derby's principal opponents, possessed an able strain of yellow-legged black reds, a color that is far more common in this country and Ireland than the white-legged.

Some of the best games of Cuba and San Domingo are the true Derby color, but whether the two varieties are even distantly related, it would be difficult to say .

It is hardly probable that the present representatives of the strain at Knowsley are equal to their ancestors, as no sporting animals, whether horses, hounds, pigeons or poultry can be kept to a high standard of excellence, unless they are frequently engaged in their appropriate contests and the most successful specimens employed as stock getters.—B. F.

WHITE FOWLS.

Snow-white fowls with yellow legs and skin, are destined to be very popular in this country, and the reason is not far to seek. There is many a man whose life is very busy who would like to take up a hobby if he felt he could spare the time, but who is deterred by the intricacies of marked plumage. Life to him seems too short to study into barrings, lacings and spanglings. With such things he will not be bothered. Yet he is unwilling to touch anything in which he can not excel or at least do respectably. If he has fowls, they must approximate to standard requirements so as to render them beyond criticism and censure by his poultry friends. He must have fowls that will extort a fair degree of admiration from his visitors, although he cannot spend the time in study necessary to breed parti-colored fowls that will do this. But he can breed a solid white fowl that will come near the mark, and therefore he desires such a breed. Such men make a demand for the white breeds, and as such men always have and always will exist so long as the world stands, there will be a permanent demand for fowls of this character.

We call attention to the advertisement of Mrs. A. A. Parker, appearing on page 11 of this issue. It is a pleasure to do this, as the late A. A. Parker was not only a most intimate friend of the writer's, but a fancier who stood on a very high pedestal in the Game Bantam fancy of America. A man of sterling integrity, and a breeder of surpassing ability, his Black Reds were famous from the Atlantic to the Pacific. His birds were always in the front rank at the leading shows, and his best friends often were his customers. Mrs. Parker writes that she has some of his choice Black Reds and Duckwings left that she will dispose of, as she needs the room for the White Wyandottes and Barred Plymouth Rocks that have been her personal property and pride for many years past, although a pen of Black Reds will always be found at her yards in memory of her husband.

The poultry exhibit held in connection with the New Castle County Fair, Wilmington, Delaware, September 4th to 7th, while not as large as it should have been, was a decided success, and reflected credit on the management. To hold a poultry show at a summer fair, conducted on the same lines as first class winter shows is a great step forward. The birds were nicely caged in Empire coops, and splendidly classified. Everything was ready for the Judge on the opening day, and all ribbons were up and awards made before three o'clock the same day. Messrs. Rice, Townsend and Donohue managed affairs like a trio of veterans.

The American classes were the largest, Barred Plymouth Rocks leading in numbers with some exceptionally fine birds in the money, notably first hen, a very clean bird in color and exceptionally good in barring, shown in splendid condition. The winning cockerels indicated first class breeding and should make a mark at later shows. The two pens shown were composed of high class specimens that would stand considerable beating at any show. White and Buff Rocks, small but good entries. White Wyandottes made a strong showing, first cock being a very good bird in type, and pure in color, winners in other classes being above the average in merit. Buff Wyandottes, a nice lot, especially first hen, which was even and sound in color, and of good type. A pair of Partridge Wyandottes and two pair of Black Wyandottes of merit completed the Wyandotte Division. The absence of Silver and Golden Wyandottes was to be regretted, as both these sterling are bred not very many miles from Wilmington.

There was a fair lot of Rhode Island Reds, with considerable quality in a few of the winners. Brown Leghorns, few but good in quality. White Leghorns, strong all along the line, and very good in quality. Orpingtons, a very attractive bunch, some very fine buffs being exhibited. Bantams, small entries, but good in quality of Golden Sebrights and Buff Cochins. Asiatic classes, small, but good in quality, notably first Partridge Cochin hen, a rare, fine bird in penciling and color. The Duck classes were chiefiy noticeable for the great pair of White Pekins that captured the blue. They were mammoth in size and fine in shape. As this was the first attempt to hold a show with a good sized entry fee attached, it came out remarkably well, and next year we may look for a largely increased entry.

A winter show will be held in Wilmington the second week in January, 1907. Further particulars regarding this exhibition will be published shortly. As no show is scheduled for Philadelphia, the metropolis of the Blue Hen State is likely to attract many entries from the fanciers in and near the Quaker City, the latter being only forty minutes run on the cars from the former.

Among the visitors at Wilmington we noticed the Silver Wyandotte fanciers Dr. Beckett and Dr. Frist. Both were sorry they had not entered birds. They will not allow such a thing to occur again. Mr. Davis, of Glenolden Poultry Yards, was on hand early and often, and felt quite happy over his winnings on White Leghorns. We regretted to have missed Louis P. Graham, the artist, who came for a few hours' visit to study the birds. Mr. Graham is at work on several paintings that will be be given to the poultry world shortly, and will add some beautiful color pictures to the rapidly growing list of poultry illustrations.

The great improvemnt in the color work of our modern illustrations of the different varieties of poultry can hardly be appreciated at its full value unless we compare the present day artistic models with the stiff and highly colored plates of the past, when the old Poultry World made such a hit with its colored pictures of fowls. And we are just beginning to learn the real art of reproducing fowls in nature by brush and engraving process to such a high standard of excellence that such pictures are now being framed and prized as an ornament, when in the past, the old time chromo was pasted up in the chicken house.

Faked specimens in a show pen must be disqualified. The present American Standard of Perfection demands this, and so does the clause in most premium lists that require all birds, except Games and Game Bantams, to be shown in their natural condition. This does not imply, however, that Games and Game Bantams can be faked by coloring feathers, splicing sickles and shortening wing-butts. It simply allows the males to be dubbed i. e, removing the comb and wattles. A whip tail is a fine appendage for any Game bird to sport, provided it is a part of the bird and not the sickles, removed from a convenient specimen not otherwise up in quality, which has been spliced on the roots of less shapely feathers of the specimen to be exhibited. This game has been successfully worked in a number of instances, not only in this country but in England.

Another risky and useless trick is the coloring of faded yellow legs with Iodine or butter color. It makes a bad job, and an observant judge can easily detect the fraud, the coloring matter localing under the scales and proving a first class advertisement for the dye or stain instead of hiding the paleness of the legs. We have run across several of such cases the past year, and are still wondering at the mistaken idea of the exhibitors in believing such jobs would help to win prizes. In one instance, an exhibitor knocked himself out of three firsts by having his birds disqualified. He would have won easily, without putting a particle of coloring matter on the shanks and toes of his birds.

Articles and illustrations in The American Fancier are not copyrighted. They belong to us, and if anyone publishes or reprints them without giving due credit, he is violating journalistic courtesy. We have confidence in the integrity and manliness of the publishers of poultry papers on matters of this kind. If there are any that violate this confidence, they injure nobody but themselves, and, being the exception and not the rule, are soon spotted and sized up at their full value. Years ago we had illustrations copyrighted, but it failed to protect, as the fake publisher never respects the law, and goes just far enough not to be caught in its meshes. There are several publishers in this country who have spent hundreds of dollars on original illustrations who can tell sad tales of bold stealing of their copyrighted work by unscrupulous printers of poultry literature. In such cases a copyright is not worth a tinker's dam.

"Now let us moult," has been and will be the cry of old birds for weeks to come. Much has been written about moulting, and yet much is to be learned on this subject. The natural process of moulting, where fowls have free range, and receive first class care, and feed is always the best. But the demands of the show room demand quicker methods, and that means artificial manipulation. Well groomed people are usually well fed. The same holds good in the animal kingdom. To condition a cow, horse, hog, dog or sheep, is an art, if the prize in the show room is the objective point. In looking over our scrap book we came across an article written twenty years ago by an English fancier that comes nearer defining the conditions governing the moulting of fowls than anything we have seen in print in recent years. We believe it worth reprinting, old as it is. The writer remarks: "There is no truer test of the constitutional vigor and health of a fowl than its condition while undergoing the process of moulting. Owing to the increased temperature of the fowl while moulting, tubercular disease that has remained inactive for some time frequently becomes strongly developed at that time. Such fowls should be killed, or they may be the cause of much loss and trouble. Some birds moult out without any apparent ill effects. From such healthy and vigorous chickens may be expected, and they should be valued on that account. Besides, if they moult early in the season, they are almost certain to make good winter layers.

"Fowls that moult late—that is after the end of September—and with evident constitutional disturbance, are certainly not likely to lay during the ensuing winter, and it is doubtful whether they will recuperate sufficiently early in the spring to lay eggs that will produce healthy and vigorous chickens. Fowls that exhibit a want of stamina at moulting time should be disposed of for the table, as they are practically not worth one shilling per head as egg producers; in fact, it is more than probable that a much greater average sum for every such fowl kept would have to be written off the debit side if the ledger at the end of the ensuing year. Those fowls that moult early have usually the advantage of warm and settled weather; those which moult late have to contend with a colder and a much more variable temperature. Therefore it is very desirable and important that fowls should moult early in the season, and, in order that they may do so, they must be hatched sufficiently early in the year to be fully matured by the end of August; then if they keep healthy they will, as a rule, moult each year in proper season.

During the moulting season I am very frequently asked how fowls should be treated while moulting. If they are in good condition for it very little change in the way of food is required, and the addition of stimulants, such as cayenne pepper, ginger, pepper corns, pepper, and other pungent spices, are, though very frequently used, positively injurious at this time. The fowl is naturally feverish when moulting, and these substances, besides increasing its febrile condition, may cause the fowl to lay while moulting, which would be almost certain to overtax its powers.

"Sulphur is very frequently recommended for fowls when moulting. If any benefit is derived from its use it must be mainly due to its laxative effect on the skin and bowel, which is more than counterbalanced by the risk that the fowl runs of taking cold through its use. Succulent green vegetable food, on account of its cooling and corrective properties, is of great value to fowls when moulting; at this time, therefore, the poultry-keeper should not fail to provide an abundant supply.

"At this time, too, fowls are not only more exposed and liable to atmospheric influences and changes, but also more susceptible to them, consequently it is very important that they should be protected from wet or damp, and currents of chilled air, for these would prolong the process and lower the tone and vigor of the fowl. On the other hand, warmth assists fowls when moulting, and they are sometimes kept in very warm places in order to precipitate a moult. Hens are set at moulting time for the same purpose by some poultry keepers. The increased temperature present during incubation appears to have the effect of hastening a moult, and shortening the period of its duration. The material for a new coat of feathers must be, to a very great extent, previously stowed up in the fowl's system, and in order that this shall be accomplished a judicious system of grain feeding ought to be adopted previous to moulting time. In addition to wheat, barley and oats, which are the best food stuffs for stock birds, and should be given alternately, say, week and week about, a little hempseed should be added thrice.

Male bird should, if possible, be separated from the hens at moulting time. This will allow them to recuperate, and become more vigorous than if they were allowed to remain together; and, if good stock is required, they should be kept apart until the breeding season. Hens are very prone to commence pulling and eating the cock's feathers when he is moulting, and consequently inattentive to them, and thus they may become addicted to the vice of feather eating. Young cocks will stand and allow themselves to be completely denuded of feathers.

The Middle town AConn.Q Show.....

Editor American Fancier:

At the September meeting of the Middletown Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Assocviation, held in the City Court Room of the Municipal Building, President Corey appointed the several committees which are to arrange and carry out the various details of the Fourth Annual Poultry Show to be given by the Association.

These committees are all now busy at work, and the coming exhibition is expected to eclipse all previous efforts of the Association whose past shows have ben among the best in New England. Mr. O. J. Bailey, of Bristol, will do the coping and feeding, which is a guarantee of satisfaction. The judges, Mr. W. R. Graves, of Springfield, Mass., and C. W. Bunnell, of New Haven, Conn., are men of National reputation and will judge with impartiality each and every bird. Premium lists will soon be ready, and a line to the Secretary will bring one on return mail. Keep your eyes open for the leading show in the old Nutmeg State.

FEATHER PULLING.

Frequent inquiries are made why fowls acquire the habit of feather pulling, and how to eradicate it. The habit is acquired when the fowls are kept in small quarters, without grass, and where habits of indolence become compulsory. Many claim various causes, but we are loth to believe any other than compulsory idleness. It is a persistent habit and hard to break up, but I would caution anyone against killing valuable birds on its account. The moulting season generally cures all feather pullers. They will not eat dead feathers, and by the time the new ones come out the habit will be forgotten. Cutting the margin and point of the upper mandible will also cure it in such just beginning the habit. In all cases, however, where it is possible, feather pullers should be separated from the rest of the flock. I had a valuable pen of silver Wyandottes, and before removing it to my present place was compelled to keep them in too small unsodded yards. They all acquired the habit or feather pulling, and in spite of everything I could do in the way of feeding or treatment persisted in pulling; so not willing to kill them I left them to their sin. So soon as moulting began feather pulling ceased, and I had no trouble afterward.

SALT FOR ROUP.

If you find a chicken with a "rattle" in its throat, head-swelling and eyes watering, remove it at once to a warm, dry place. Take hold of it by the neck, rather tightly so as to make it open its mouth, and plunge its head into a pint of salt water—a teaspoonful of salt to a pint of water—then wipe the head dry and inject a little coal oil into the nostrils, using a sewing machine oil can, also pour a few drops of oil into its mouth. Feed a little soft (not sloppy) food and if you have begun in time you will conquer.

Like Old Times.

To The American Fancier:

It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,

Very respectfully,
ELLIS DUNTZ.
Glencoe Mills, N. Y., May 3, 1906.

How to provide the very best range for my fowls has been an interesting subject to me for a long time. Some form of animal and bird nature is constantly preying upon the flocks.

Vigorous plant growth is one form of protection from the heat of the sun and the sharp eye of a hawk or crow, and perhaps, the best and surest.

My stock this year has ranged pretty much in an immense field of growing corn, and I have flattered myself that I had them well fixed, both from the carnivorous source named, and the prying eyes of any light fingered gentry that might be strolling by, I feel doubly secure, because I noticed a family of quail were also enjoying the hospitality of the dense shelter.

To the presence of the quail I hold responsible for the itroduction of a new actor on the scene.

All week we have been busy at work in this wilderness harvesting the corn, the chicks following closely from stout to stout grabbing every insect shaken from the stalks in cutting.

With a couple dozen scattered about me, I was just moralizing on their sociability when one gave a squawk and came out in the open on the run with a big weasel in hot pursuit, with a yell I sent the chaser one way and the chased the other, further efforts to get sight of him has failed. My idea is the weazel was trailing the quail and came upon the chickens.

The only chance to save them will be to carry on the harvesting with dispatch so as to leave the ground open.

While I would not care to confine my growing stock in small bare yards, my contention is such shelter is not desolute protection, no doubt the general health of the flock to say nothing of the number saved from hawks and crows, would over balance a loss of say ten per cent. from such a source as menaces them.

It has always been my practice to leave the weeds about the farm and hen yards uncut until late autumn, and the fowls enjoy the shade from the noon-day heat and dust among them in contentment at this season.

Following the starvation theory for quick moulting, some are now advancing the gradual moulting idea, letting them down easy so to speak, claiming a small egg production is better than none, which is common sense, if one cannot get a whole loaf do not refuse a half loaf.

Some few hens lay while moulting others moult early and commence laying soon after, which accounts for the partial egg supply.

What shall be done with the cockerels. Every one is supposed to know their own business, though we some times exercise poor business perogatives.

It will not pay the small breeder to hold them for breeding purposes. First, they take up the room the pullets should have and make nuisances of themselves, unless one has a separate range for them, there they eat their heads off, while the owner is watching his mail anxiously looking for the order which but rarely comes.

Second, by seeking an early market these things mentioned are not only avoided, but attention and range can be given the pullets, and perhaps, the extra care and liberties may result in their laying a month earlier, more than repaying the difference in the sale of the cockerels, from what was realized and what the breeder fondly hoped for, move them quick is my motto and I feel that I am the gainer by it.

Those breeders who have tried to maintain at least a show of utility in breeding White Leghorns find themselves up against it when showing under the new standard, a creamy colored ear and quill is generally accompained by a rich yellow leg, good size and excellent sized eggs. A genuine enamel white ear and white quill is followed by a faded shank and white in the face, eggs as small and mean as a Hamburg, and a serawny little body. You pay your money gentlemen, take your choice. It is these little things which widens the gulf between fancy and utility. In one case the standard directs and exhibitor or judge have no choice, in the other the egg basket is the dictator.

The whisperings of the northeast winds are followed by an epidemic of roup in the yards of the unobserving fancier. Its either a rattle in the throat and a pill early in the game, or a swelled head and the ax later.

This locality has been visited each morning for a week by a fog so heavy it could be cut away in blocks, next came a steady blow from the east in lieu of rain so greatly needed.

The first case I noticed seemed to be suffering with a broken leg; she fracture could be found; the day after her ailment was apparent in a badly swelled head and a strong odor of roup. As it would have taken months to effect even a doubtful cure, she was sacrificed.

The second case attracted notice by her attempt to get breath as if she had a piece of ground bone in her throat, which was a very natural conclusion, she being the greatest glutton on the farm. An examination showed no signs of an obstruction in the throat, but when held, head down, a milky substance ran from her mouth, treatment was promptly given in this and various other cases, and in a few days they will be as well as ever.

In matters of this kind it pays the handler to be on the job at all times, any of the various roup cures in tablet form are effective and easy to administer, not being at hand anything that will cure a cold in a human being will answer. Kemp's Balsam is one of the best, and I always keep a bottle on hand.

These cases above referred to, developed at different houses, and in some cases where the pullets were roosting in trees, which shows no set cause can prove fallible in all cases and conditions.

Mere application of the alphabet in precise and grammatical construction make mighty dry reading, after you imbibe a certain amount of it. I have just been trying to read such a one through, which the constructor has had copyrighted under the title of the "Origin of the breeds."

Why it is necessary to copyright when the newspapers all publish baseball and racing news is more than I can see.

A correspondent in the American Poultry Journal says, "a satisfactory pump for white washing poultry houses can be bought of the Carr Manfg. Co., Kansas City, Mo., at a cost of $4.50.

There would be more white washing done were a good pump always at hand, after buying a couple that prove worthless the job is liable to get neglected. Aside from the benefit to the fowls from sweet quarters to live in, a good active force pump quickly removes the accumulation or dust and cobwebs about the pens.

A bruised foot makes an unsightly appearance, bumble foot is nothing more or less than a boil on the foot, caused by a bruise where the foot first comes in contact with the floor in alighting from the perch, or jumping down from high places, for a quick cure lance and wash out with diluted carbolic, then bind up the bruised portion that the sore may not be aggravated. I learn every year it pays to keep litter constantly on the floor, even though moulting time makes it necessary to remove often to get rid of the cast-off feathers and the vermin that infest them.

This week has been devoted to the poultry part of the farm preparing for next winter. Two loads of the finest second crop clover and leaves was stored, and the buckwheat for the mid-day scratching diversion stands curing in the field. My methods of handling these crops are devoid of any amount of labor once they are stored. The clover is placed in a vessel and boiling water is poured over it, covered and allowed to steam. The liquid is a valuable feed for the young calves and the freshened clover is placed in the pens, the fowls eating what they wish, no cutting or mixing being done. Last season we did not have one case of crop bound in any flock. The handling of the buckwheat is equally simple. At noon each pen is given its portion, and they busy themselves over the threshing for hours. The value does not come from the grain but from the labor of getting it out.

As a sequel to my weasel story, might say I got the gentleman. He nailed a chicken, so I filled his old hide so full of shot you could not lay a dime piece between them.

Several newly-hatched chickens (so the story goes) were recently found in a bale of hay at Belfast, Me. The owner of the bale thinks that the eggs were probably pressed into the hay when it was green, and were hatched by the heat generated.

EGGS.—Receipts, Saturday, were 10,426 cases; for the week, 84,917; since March 1, 2,901,431. No features developed Saturday towarrant the slightest revision of late prices. The arrivals were considered heavy the entire week, and far beyond actual requirements. In some instances stock had to be stored to avoid losses. The upper grades showed the most strength and colse clearances were effected of stock of this decription. Fresh gathered extra firsts sold readily at 22½ @23c. Western firsts, which is the principal grade dealt in, commanded 21½c and in some instances 22c was realize Dirty eggs were not as active as earli in the week and dragged at 17c. DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts Saturday were 876 packages; for the weke 9,049. Trading Saturday was very quiet and quotations on the various sorts were left as last reported. Supplies of freshkilled poultry were liberal, consisting of mainly medium and undersorts, which ruled weak and sold at irregular prices. Fancy spring turkeys were in light supply and wanted. Philadelphia broilers were extremely scarce, anw if here, would readily command 19@21c. Only the fanciest lots of folws received attention, the lower grades being neglected. Long Island spring ducks closed strong under light spot offerings. Geese were scarce and firm. The demand for squabs was good, but the offerings of fancy birds were small. Frozen poultry dull and neglected.

On the title page of this issue is a reproduction from the Feathered World of English and African Owls. The group is the best of its kind we have ever been fortunate enough to see. Nothing so educates the amateurs, and oftimes the memories of those who have bred them just a few years are revived by reproductions of true type, in this respect the half-tone is ideal. It is from a drawing made by England's foremost artist, A. F. Lydon, whose pencils has given the fancy ideals in most all varieties.

The reproduction of a trio of Fantails owned and bred by that well known Fantail breeder, James Blair, of Yonkers, N. Y., is another picture, although taken from life, represents the true type of American Fantails. Beginning at the left is the Blue Cock, winner of first and four specials, including the $150 Challenge Bowl for the best colored Fantail at New York 1900, 1st New York 1901, 1st New York 1902; 1st Washington, 1st Boston. Center is the Saddle Cock, 2nd young bird at New York, 1904, 1st and $50 Challenge Cup at New York 1905, 1st New York 1906. At the right is the White Hen, 1st and Special for the best Pigeon in the show Boston 1899. 1st Washington and twice 1st at New York. Fantails are a most discouraging variety to photograph, and to obtain three such pictures to publish is quite an accomplishment. The Blue Cock is about the best we have yet seen, to be sure you must have the bird to get the photo, in this the photographer had little trouble. In Mr. Blair's lofts are shelltered the best strain of Saddles probably in the world, Palace winners have been imported "galore" to capture the saddle trophy from Mr. Blair, but as yet have met with little success. And by all reports his 1906 youngsters are fully up to the standard set by their ancestors. In 1905 Mr. Blair made a most remarkable win, capturing both Challenge Cups offered by the Eastern Fantail Club, and winning all firsts in the White and Saddle classes at Madison Square Garden.

The Pigeon display at the New York State Fair was the best yet sen at this exhibition. The competition in the Pouter, Magpie, Tumbler, Dragon and Working Homer classes were very strong as shown by the list of awards, especially so considering the time of year. Mr. W. J. Stanton placed the ribbons and gave general satisfaction.

December 10-14, 1906, the Provincial Winter Fair will be held at Guelph, Ontario, Canada. This is the big event of the year, over two thousand dollars are offered in cash prizesetaoin taoine are offered in regular cash prizes, and besides these, there will be a list of special prizes which probably have a value of over one thousand dollars. The special list will be issued about November 10th. Before being eligible to compete for special prizes an exhibitor must have made a contribution which should be sent to the Secretary before the 15th of October. The advertising at the Fair is such that every breeder should make a showing. Persons wishing prize lists, entry blanks, or other information, should write A. P. Westervelt, Secretary, Parliament Building, Toronto, Canada.

In the racing of young birds it is generally accepted that all competitors have an equal chance, that old hands may have that experience which enables them to condition and fit old birds for the races, but now, when it comes to the young bird events, that experience, that skill are really not so much to count upon as in the old bird races. But to think for a moment that any victory will fall to the lot of either beginner or old fancier by luck is a mistake. Should you think the young bird races is anybody's game you are indeed quite mistaken. Experience, skill, judgment, and patience are all required if you wish for any degree of success.

Another two or three weeks will we hope end the risks for the birds this season. The weather is not suited to the work, the air being either so heavy with moisture as to make speed an impossibility or so cold the birds are not inclined to fly.

In either case the record is made against the birds, while the chances of their being shot or caught are greatly increased. A curious feature in this autumn's flying is the great number of birds which have so to speak, disappeared. That is, of which there is no report either caught, shot or visiting.

We hope the time will come when the young bird races will be discouraged by the clubs and general expression. It certainly is detrimental to the sport in the number of birds sacrificed each season.

Mr. Herbert R. Foshay begins a display ad in this issue. The quality of stock owned by the Mamaroneck Lofts is first class.

In the hottest competition ever seen in America at Madison Square Garden, last year, Mr. Foshay made a very commended showing, and caused some in Jacobin Alley, to sit up and take notice.

Useful Hints in Fantail Breeding.

By J. B. Harrison.

The following notes from my own actual experience. It is now about seven years since I first began in the Fantail Fancy. I have heard it remarked several times by Pigeon fanciers that Fantails take too much breeding and keeping clean, and that it is no use of novices going in for them. I say, nothing of the kind. Mind you, the loft is the first consideration. A Fantail will not thrive in a place where the Working Homer will, and, again, it's no use any one taking up Fantails unless they have patience, and will look after their pets properly. It won't do as I have often seen birds fed—a lot of corn thrown down on the floor, and the birds never seen then again for two or three days.

Housing.—The place where my Fans are housed measures 24 feet long, 6 feet long, 6 feet wide, and 6 feet high. It is raised one foot high from the ground, so that it always keeps dry. Dampness will kill the jaunty little Fantail! This place is divided into two compartments, which are handy when the birds are separated. The cocks are in one end, and the hens in the other. In the breeding season I have a lattice door made and allot small places of about 42 by 18 by 36 long, wide, and high, to each pair. I find, with doing this the pairs fill their eggs much better than when alowed to have the run of the whole loft. Each pair is fastened up in these places until they have laid, then they are allowed out. These places are all taken out when the breeding season is over to allow more room. I have also another place about half the size of the above to avoid overcrowding. In addition, I have some 3 or 4 small pens arranged under shelter, to mate up birds, and which also act as a walking pen. I have a supply of show pens, in which he birds are put through their paces before sending off to shows.

The Fantail being a bird with feather properties, they require a great deal of ground space. I would impress upon novices to avoid overcrowding. It is the biggest evil in the Fantail loft. My places are covered with dry, white sawdust, as coarse as I can get, about three inches deep. I am not an advocate of perches for Fantails. I find if the birds fly much they get their wings caught in their tails, and if not attended to, throw the tails all on one side, and in time they are clean spoilt for the show pen, and I find it a very good plan just about dusk to go into the loft, and if any bird has the wing ends caught in their tails to gently take them out. By so doing you may save a god tail from being spoilt.

Purchasing Birds.—Some may say this is an easy matter. There are always plenty of birds to be had! Yes, that may be. My advice to young beginners is to do as I did. Go to some reliable breeder, tell him that you are just starting, and let him know what money you have to invest, and leave all to him. No doubt he will mate them up properly. He knows more about each bird in his loft than you do, and, again, I say if you have £10 to invest it is far better to purchase one good pair than get three or four pairs of middling birds! I myself started with two pairs, a pair of whites and a pair of blues. I would advise novices to stick to one color for a start, be it white, blue, black, saddle, red or yellow. Of course, whites lead the way, being bred nearest to perfection.

Selection of Stock.—My experience in breeding teaches me that you get tail properties from the cock, and body properties from the hen. I would, therefore, advise novices to get hens with good body properties, well rolled up, nice short legs, short backs, and good cushions, and to get their heads well down in the right place, and also of moderate size. I am not an advocate of extra small hens. I have had some, but they have proved to be barren. The cock must have good tail properties, a well spread, thick tail, free from split or twisted feathers. The twisted feathers throw back, which I have proved from experience. I do not mind the cock being a little large in body if he has got a well balanced, and good, thick, well spread tail. Of course, he has to be mated to a fine bodied and well built hen. Some people say and think the tail is everything. Certainly it is all right, but I think our all round judges put too much on tail. I say tails can be made. Therefore, I say, bodies should be recognized more than they are at present. I myself love body properties, and to-day my hens have these properties stamped through the loft. My advice to novices is to never sell your best hens, and, above all, keep a careful pedigree of every bird in the loft. As a proof to back up my statement about getting birds mated up from a reliable breeder, I do not care to mention names in justice to other breeders, but in my first season's breeding I bred seven whites and seven blues, and not one of these a waster. It was one of the whites of the first season's breeding that won me my first Fantail Club certificate. So you see, this breeder has put me on the right line to begin with.

Showing.—I myself have never done a great deal, although when I do I am nearly always in the money. At the same time, I do not wish to sound my own trumpet. The birds must be well trained and attended to before being dispatched off. I like nice, roomy baskets. Cramped up baskets are no use to me. If you do not win do not blame the judge. He has a hard task. and, again, the birds sometimes will not show, but sulk in a corner of the pen. I myself have had to pass good birds on that account. I remember when judging the Fantails at Whitby, there was a white hen that had won several prizes. She would not show, but got into the corner of the pen and sulked. I could not get her to show so had to pass her. Again, say you show a bird with rather a large body at one show under a judge, and she wins. You show her under the same judge again and she gets nothing. You wonder why. It might be that at the next show most of the winners were very small in body. This would make your bird look large, so you see the judge can't always be blamed. Remember the Conference rings are the best. Never overshow a good youngster. I myself have ruined good youngsters through being too eager to win. They cannot stand a great deal of knocking about. It is bound to tell in time. Never send the same birds out to three or four shows in a week and expect them to keep up their strength as though they had been at home.

Feeding.—Maple peas and tares; I find from experience, are the best of food. In the summer months, and when the birds are breeding, I feed at 7 A. M., 12 noon, and 6 P. M. I have small wood troughs made, and I give them as much as they will pick up at a meal, not leaving any to get soiled by the droppings. Clear water is supplied daily, and one day in the week a little Condys fluid is mixed in the water, another day a pinch of Epsom Salts, and the other four days pure water. I find the above two things good, especially in the breeding and moulting season. The bath is supplied two or three days a week, according to the weather. In the moulting season I find dari, a little new wheat, canary and hempseed all good food. I am fond of canary seed. It seems to tighten up the feathers when getting nicely through the moult, and the finishing touch is then put on.

I mate my birds for the season's breeding about the end of February or middle of March, and always try to have every pair separated by the end of July. I like to get them separated early, and get them through moult before the cold weather sets in. We Fantail fanciers know what it is to get a warm and quick moult. The feathers grow longer when the birds are moulted in warm weather. I find Mr. Dixon Jenkinson's medicines capital helps during the moulting season. Grit is a thing I am a strong advocate of, especially when the birds have not their liberty; it is as much as corn to me. I thing if this were attended to more there would not be so many youngsters lost.

SPOUTING BARBS.

If a man wants the very highest type of barbs he must chance the tendency to spouts, and try to correct it as much as possible in the breeding of his birds, and this can be done without detriment to the beauty of the eye if judges will but cease to give prizes to birds with spouts; but while this practice is continued there will be no improvement, because some will continue to breed without regard to the point, being confident in the continued long judging of the judges, and so long as this state of things continues it is useless to think that the popularity of the barb can be increased among fanciers. There is another point to be considered about the very thick and heavy eyes in both barbs and carriers, viz., that birds with these live hardly half the time the sounder, thinner, and (for their age) smaller-eyed birds do. The reason is, the fast growing heavy-eyed birds not only reach maturity much quicker, and on that account must die earlier, but in the very large majority they are not so robust in constitution. In my opinion, eyes so perfect in beauty that no fancier can possibly find a fault in them can be bred easily if men will not try to breed the largest, thickest, and softest that can be bred. These cannot be bred without liability to the above drawbacks. C. J. D.

HOMERS IN A FOG.

In a letter from George H. Sibley, of Williamsport, he states: "I tried what was to me an experiment with my Homers. The early morning was very foggy, and to see what the effect would be near home I let the birds out. No sooner were they on the wing than the fog became denser until trees and buildings a hundred yards away were scarcely outlined. Of course the birds were out of sight instantly, and for ten minutes I saw nothing of them, when five appeared high overhead, then became stationery, working their wings forward as though about to light. Then three settled on neighboring houses, where they have never been known to drop before. They seemed utterly dazed, although but two hundred feet from from the loft. Where the others were I don't know although I searched the neighborhood thoroughly.

During the morning the fog lifted and at noon I found all home.

So satisfied am I with the experiment that I shall never take them half a mile from home in such weather.

WASHING CHICKENS.

By William McNeil, London.

I have a special coop for drying the chickens after I have washed them. The trouble with birds, if you do not have a special place in which to dry them, is that they will sit down on the straw and they will never get properly dried; but if you have a special coop like this one I have here with a double wire net bottom, there will be no trouble. I put the birds in the coop, and I have a thermometer hanging up in it, and I let the heat go up to 109 to 110, and they will dry off very quickly. You can stand this box on the top of a stove or hot air register, but watch them that they do not get too hot. I have mine on the top of a stove.

It is hardly necessary to wash a black bird. Before I go to a show with black birds I go around with a pail of soft water and sponge, and I take the bird up in my hand and damp it all over, and then I put it back on the perch, and that bird will not go to sleep until he has every one of his feathers dried, and every one of them will go through his beak. I do Silver Sebrights in the same way and the Golden Sebrights also. I go over every bird in that way before I take them to a show. I only sponge them once.

Q. Do you think it necessary to sponge a buff?

A. Certainly; you know how much better we feel after we get washed up. You should wash a bird three or four days before the judge sees him, because you wash all the gloss off, and it will take him that long to get it back again.

Q. Can you put a gloss on artificially?

A. You could by feeding them.

Q. Can you put any oil on to make them glossy?

A. No, nothing but clean water for a chicken. The minute you put oil on you spoil it. Before I commence to wash I have my sponge and everything handy, and I hold the bird and do everything myself. When I haven't the right kind of soap, I use Pearline. I like Sunlight Soap better than anything else. I put a little borax in both the washing water and the rinsing water, and it will cut out any soap that may get in the feathers; and if the feathers are at all creamy I put considerable blue in the water, but if feathers are snow white then I do not use blue upon that bird. This bird (illustrated) would take three or four washings to make it good. The first thing I do is to wash the crest and beak. As soon as I am through washing them I put them in the drying coop and after put them in a shipping coop. Keep them there for twenty-four hours to cool them off, and there is no danger of drafts. I always rub in one direction when I am washing, otherwise there is danger of breaking the feathers. I never use a towel in drying; only I cannot get out any more water with the sopnge, and in order to start the bird drying I raise up all the feathers. Sometimes I go over the bird with a sponge dipped in blue water. If the feathers are too oily put the bird in the sun and that will take out the oil, and where the bird is creamy you can take a strong dose of blue water and soak the hackle and it will take out the creamy water.

I feel that I owe much to this College, because I never go any place where I feel so much at home. When I think of the amount of good work that the College has done for young Canadians, and when I think of the chance you young people have to what I had, then you ought to make perfect chicken men, and if you do not go ahead then you are no good. I wish I had had the same chance. I look upon Mr. Crelman, the President of this institution, as one of the finest men in the Province. I do not think there is another man in Canada who could take the place he occupies. We have taken kindly to Mr. Graham. We have found him straightforward and he has been a great benefit to this country. Mr. Graham will tell you that we have all worked together.

Mr. Graham: I think it is only our duty to pass a vote of thanks to Mr. McNeil and Mr. Oke, who came all the way from London to tell us something about chickens. I can tell you that it is not often that Mr. McNeil opens his heart to you, and if you do not appreciate what he has told you it is your own fault. I have much pleasure in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. McNeil and Mr. Oke. The motion was seconded and carried.

Mr. McNeil: I can assure you that I accept it with very good grace. I can say for Mr. Oke that it is his first appearance, and he is a little shy, the same as I used to be. There is one thing that I am proud of, and that is that he is going to be the best judge that we have in America, and that when he gives his decision the boys can go around and they can decide on the same bird.

Mr. Oke: I am sure I try to do the best I can. We all make mistakes. If I have been of any benefit to you I am sure I am very much pleased. This is my first visit to the College, and I hope it won't be my last.

HOMOEPATHY FOR CHICKENS.

(From the Homœpathic Envoy.)

Spongia will cure the roup in chickens almost every time.

Aconite, or if it fails, euphrasia will cure sore eyes in hens.

Ipecac (the homœpathic form) is the principal remedy for diarrhœa in fowls or, if the trouble be known to be the results of faulty feeding, give arsenicum. Sould these fail resort to chamomilla.

In head distemper, when hens lose their bright looks, crouch about in corners and die readily one after another, close examination will show the skin around the anus to be colored a high-red with black spots. This malady is contagious, and has a character similar to inflammation of the spleen. This plague is mostly observed during hot weather. Separate the sick and give them nux vomica, homœpathic form.

In white comb, the comb becomes slowly covered with a whitish dust, which seizes the wattle and then passes into the skin of the neck, the feathers of which die off. Give sulphur for a day or two and then change to staphisagria, which is the main remedy.

In itch the body is covered with itch-like eruptions. Administer sulphur for three days, then follow with staphisagria.

For pip, feed on soft food and give spongia.

For gapes, try spongia, and if it fails give carallium rubrum. The dose twelve pellets of medicine in the drinking water.

The Latest and Best Book on Success With Poultry is

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

THE GUINEA PIG

The Smooth, Abyssinian and Peruvian; Standard for Each---Breeding for Color

In treating of the guinea pig fancy, I am about to write, not only of what is but of what may or probably will be. I cannot show with certainty how to procure this or that tint of color or peculiarity of form. I can only state what I have done myself, hint at processes that may lead to success and indicate the possibilities of the future. I must leave to the intelligence, perseverance and inventive powers of others the culture of the new-found land to which I can only point the way.

Hitherto there appears to be very little care bestowed upon the breeding of the guinea pig, and no attempt to do so in such a systematic manner for points as to form what is ordinarily understood as a "fancy." Two cases were in operation in this case—the single permanence in character and irregular marking of those bred, and the difficulty of disposing of the weeds. I shall show that neither of these causes need continue active.

There is no creature better adapted for the purposes of the fancier than the guinea pig. The rapidty with which generation follows generation gives extraordinary facilities for selection, and for investigating the physiological laws of breeding. A desired result may be looked for in a very short time. The breeder of horses or cattle must wait many years before he can ascertain whether the theory on which he has based his proceedings is correct, but the guinea pig fancier may hope to revolutionize his strain and remodel it upon a new form or color in a short time.

We may for purposes of fancy breeding make three divisions: The old smooth guinea pig described by Gesner; the rough English or so-called Abyssinian, and the Peruvian.

I will consider these in the above order. With respect to smooth cavies, Topsell mentions that he has seen this kind all white, all yellow and some other colors. The only other variety I have found to breed true to color is the pure white with red eyes. It has what Darwin calls great prepotency of transmission. Other self-colors than white are rare, and do not as a rule breed true as the white do. This, however, I take to be a matter of selection, long continued, and have no doubt that selfs might be bred in each variety of all colors that have appeared in either of the three. I consider the breeding of self-colored animal to be probably the first step to breeding to pattern in color.

THE SMOOTH

In the smooth variety, I have had six colors, though, of course, other breeders may have had more. These are: Glossy black, white, fawn, red brown, light grey and dark brown, something like the agonti. These were colors that appeared in patches, not selfs, which are entirely of one color.

FAMOUS ORPINGTON HEN, "BEAUTY"

The early forms of the smooth domestic guinea pig have the peculiar squareness of nose that characterizes the capybara, and I find that time, or other causes, has modified this feature in the direction of making it pointed, and less square. The eye, also, of the old pig is large, round and full, expressing a confiding and gentle disposition.

The smooth tortoise shell is well known and very pretty, and the black of this kind is of a deep, glossy and fine color. I have never seen a self-colored black of either this or the other kinds, but I have seen some nearly approaching, and do not doubt that it could be produced. Many years since I had a self of the smooth red brown; but I was not then aware of the difficulty of breeding selfs, and especially of breeding out the white patch. I have also at present a smooth breed, nearly self-colored, with a coat speckled like the agouti, and am trying some experiments with it. This color was got from the Abyssinian, in which it appeared as a sport. I am under the impression that the smooth variety is not, upon the average, so heavy as the rough breeds, but I have not sufficient statistics to speak with certainty on this point, particularly as such great differences in size result from feeding and other treatment.

There is one respect in which the smooth guinea pig has great advantages. The head is handsomer in shape, and in the position of the eye; and the shape and expression of the eye itself is much more beautiful. The agouti-colored sow I have has an eye so large and soft-looking as to bear a likeness to that of a gazelle, and it is not placed so high in the head as in the rough kinds, but at the side, so that the expression, instead of being, as with them, furtive and rat-like, is confiding and gentle. The smooth white variety with red eyes must always be considered pretty, though the white Peruvian would probably be preferred. There is no kind that breeds so true to color as the white, and I find this observation applies also to the white Peruvian.

The "prepotency of transmission" is so great in pure white that, though they may be sports out of any other breed, pure white with red eyes, when mated never have a parti-colored pig. The white is the best breed for the table because of its white skin and delicate appearance when cooked.

The standard for the smooth is: Classes—Best selfs of each color; best tortoise shell; best white with black ears. Points—Fine, short hair; square profile of nose; large, soft eye; brightness of color; distinctness of marking when not self-colored, size.

THE ABYSSINIAN.

The Abyssinian, as it is mis-named, appears to have originated in England, as I have already suggested. It is, as well as I can judge from those I have weighed, larger and heavier than the smooth variety. The frame is broad; the head, particularly that of the boar, is massive; the shoulders are broad and heavy. The eye is not so round and full as that of the smooth breed and is placed nearer the top of the head. This characteristic eye, in combination with a more pointed nose, give the animal a fierce and furtive expression which reminds us somewhat of the physiognomy of the rat. This simile is, I think, justified by facts, as the Abyssinian is frequently a bold fighter and more disposed to combativeness than the old kind. It has also more individuality of character and when running loose about a house has sometimes very odd ways.

The following colors have shown themselves in this breed: Black, dusky black ((approaching to what rabbit fanciers term blue,), fawn, white, light red brown, dark red brown, dark brown or "agouti," dark speckled brown, dark grey and light grey, ten in all.

The fur of this variety is wiry, generally radiating from bare centers and standing up on the head in a remarkable way. But the arrangement of the fur differs very much in individuals and thus affords great scope for selection. If the length of fur in the Abyssinian exceeds one and one-half inches there is reason to suppose a cross with the Peruvian.

The standard for the Abyssinian is: Classes—Best selfs of each color; best tortoise shell. Points—Length of fur not to exceed one and one-half inches; brightness of color; breadth over shoulders, which should be thick; mustache; radiations of fur, with bare patches in centre; size, weight; general vigor.

PERUVIANS.

The variety known in England as "Peruvian" and is in France properly termed Cochon d'Inde d'Angora. I consider I have much improved upon the French type, which was too bare about the head, by crossing with a very remarkable sport I had from the Abyssinian; and I have now a Peruvian boar with very long hair on the head and heavy mustache, as well as the long hair on the croup. The Peruvian is longer and a little heavier than the smooth breed. The hair on the hinder parts of my French boar was 5½ inches long, but I have since bred some with hair eight inches in length; still, this length is rare. The fur is soft and somewhat pendent. In proportion to the length of fur, Peruvians are not so well furnished about the head as Abyssinians; but there are exceptions to this rule. The skull of the Peruvian appears to me to be smaller in proportion to the size of the body than in either the smooth or Abyssinian varieties.

By crossing and selection I have produced some very remarkable specimens of the guinea pig. As I have only seen three thoroughbred Peruvians I am unable to state what variations in fur or color may have been obtained in France, but I do not think there has been any systematic cultivation there.

The Peruvian, judging by my experience, is rather more subject to disease than the other kinds, and particularly to tubercle, which may proceed from too much breeding in-and-in. Mrs. Walker, of Bottersford, whose system of management is almost identical with my own, and to whom I am indebted for a good deal of valuable information, is convinced that the smooth white breed is much more delicate than the other kinds.

I have found in the Peruvian five colors: White, ducky, black, dark grey, fawn and red-brown, this latter color having only lately been transferred from an Abyssinian.

The Standard for this variety would be: Classes—Best selfs of each color; best white; best mixed colors; best white with white ears; best white with black ears and nose; best of any color with pendent hair; longest hair all over, of any color. Points—Size; length of hair, particularly on head; cleanness of fur and freedom from matting; general health and vigor.

MATING FOR COLOR.

We have the smooth in six colors, the Abyssinian in ten and the Peruvian in five, thus giving ten distinct forms of fur, in which many variations occur from time to time. This gives us thirty elements out of which to form a "fancy." But supposing that, as may occur the two rough kinds become amalgamated, we have twenty factors in our calculations if we only breed for self-colors in rough and smooth. This is not a bad beginning, and would give scope for much sound judgment and perseverance, as the tendency of patched marking to reappear, in all but the red-eyed white, is constant.

The variations in arrangement and appearance of fur are also very great, and would give rise to several fancy varieties. In some there is a mane along the back; in others, much mustache; in others, again, a tuft on the head; and one pecular variation I have bred from has a smooth head, with remarkably long pendent hair behind. Then, again, if we mix the colors and breed to pattern, there could be no end to the possible variations of markings. If, for instance, we were to combine black, red, fawn and white into a tortoise shell, how many fancies we might have with these four colors. We might select for black heads, or red, or white; or we might choose to have the feet all of some one color or a band of a particular color round a certain part of the body. What is possible with these four colors is possible with all the rest. I have had some charmingly tender combinations of grey, white and fawn, in long hair.

As to the laws that govern these mutations, I have been enabled to find only one upon which I can rely, though I have bred hundreds of these pigs each year, for four years past. I find that the red-eyed white, when paired together, always produce their like, without reference to the colors of their parents, or of any previous cross. I have not, in my experience, met with any exception to this rule. I infer, from this circumstance, that the ancient breeders must have formed and preserved the white breed with great care, and that it must have been bred in great purity for a very long period of time, because this is not a retroversion to a natural color, but to a color of domestication produced by culture.

I have found the light greys very difficult to breed, as they appear to have a peculiar delicacy of constitution. The only self of this beautiful variety I ever succeeded in breeding died of tubercle. Indeed, I think that uncommon sports are usually delicate and, of course, frequently throw back. This is certainly disappointing, but the fancier should not be discouraged, as it also indicates that when any sport is fixed by long and careful breeding and selection there is a probability that it also will acquire this permanence of character.

There is one caution I must give to the fancier on a small scale. He must not suppose that he can maintain first-rate quality by breeding from one or two pairs. He should associate himself with other fanciers and by free exchange of stock derive some of the advantages possessed by the breeder on a large scale, that is, the power to select promising matches and to avoid the evil effects of consanguinity. Also let him beware how he parts with his most perfect stock. If he does so he will soon find the average of merit become lower, and a rapid appearance of weeds will ensue. It must be remembered that only a small proportion of the young ones born are of the first quality and that it does not follow because he gets a handsome pair out of a first little that the parents are certain to produce more of the same kind. The probability is that they may, but if they shrdlu shrdl cmfwyu may, but if he dispose of any of remarkable beauty under the impression that, as he has the parents, he can breed more of the same order, he may find himself most disapreeably undeceived.

The great difficulty in the way and one which has probably hitherto prevented the establishment of this fancy is the inability to sell the "weeds," or animals not satisfactory from the fancier's point of view. The guinea pig is so profilic that the progeny must be removed by sending the useless young to table, for which purpose they were probably domesticated.—From "The Guinea Pig for Food, Fur and Fancy," by C. Cumberland, F. Z. S.

FEEDING CHICKS.

Thoughtless and careless feeding is the cause of a large percentage of the deaths among the youngest chickens. The main differences between these and full-grown fowls in this respect are due to the much more feeble grinding power of the gizzard, and to the fact that the rapidly developing muscles, bones and feathers demand a greater (relatively speaking) supply of fresh-forming and bone-making substances than is given to adults. The crops are also less capacious in proportion to the size of the bird, their proper food is more rapidly digested, and therefore they need to be fed oftener. Greater care is needed in keeping everything fresh and sweet.

For the first day no feed is needed; the remnants of the egg still continue to afford nourishment. After this feeding may be begun, and it seems natural to continue their egg diet, on which the chick has hitherto lived. Begin, therefore, with yolks, slightly cooked by being dropped into hot water, not boiled, mixed with stale wheat bread crumbs, or an equal quantity of crumb of corn cake, made by baking a dough of Indian meal and milk. The bread crumbs are most approved, wheat having more growth material than corn. Some breeders continue the use of eggs for six weeks, and report, as might be expected, that the chicks do admirably under it. One egg daily for six to eight is sufficient at first, but during the first three weeks may be gradually increased to two per diem. Feed every two hours during the first week, beginning on removal from the nest. Very weakly chicks may be fed, if worth the trouble, with raw egg beaten with brandy and given through a glass tube. The English have a practice, not to be approved, of cromming with peppercorns and grains of barley. The chicks will swallow clean white sand of the size of mustard seed, and it should be given them at the start.

At the age of one week the egg may be gradually changed for boiled spluck and livers, chopped very fine. As already hinted, chicks need rather more fresh food, in proportion, than grown fowls. Too much, however, seems to cause weak limbs, deformed toes and loose joints. Coarse Indian meal may be given, cooked as a thick, crumbly mush, and should not be too wet; too wet dough destroys a great many young chickens. Corn meal mixed with cold water often scours young chicks. Tegetmeier recommends a mixture two-thirds sweet coarse oatmeal and one-third barley meal, mixed with milk or water. Dough should always be mixed fresh, as it soon sours, especially if made with milk.

For variety try wheat bran and ground oats, mixed with corn meal. The green food must not be forgotten. Give all they will eat of tender grass, chopped very fine, and mashed boiled potatoes. Onions and cabbage cut very fine are much enjoyed from the first till the last. Oats planted in boxes and set in a warm, light place in winter and early spring, soon give plenty of green fodder. The green food may be discontinued when the chicks get large enough to pull it for themselves, and they may be allowed to run anywhere, as they will do no harm in gardens.

As they get older you may gradually get into the grains. Good success is reported from the use of rice alone, and that almost or quite from the first. Cracked corn (freshly cracked) and crushed wheat screenings do for the beginning; give them mixed half and half. As they grow the smaller grains of corn or wheat may be given, and after they are well feathered out corn may be more extensively used. But the meat diet must still be persevered in; chandlers' greaves are useful, if very nice and sweet. Maggots seem to agree with them particularly well, and it is well worth while to go into the somewhat unsavory business of breeding them. Milk "fills the bill" very well, and skimmed milk should be used as the drink for the first two months. Curds and clabbered milk are excellent, and buttermilk is not to be despised.

The feathering time is particularly critical, and requires careful feeding, with bone dust added to the diet. A little powdered sulphur and charcoal should be added occasionally.

The feeding time should be regular, and may be gradually rendered less frequent. After the third month five times a day is best, although they will do fairly well if fed thrice daily.—How to Feed Fowls.

FEED LITTLE AND OFTEN.

Few new beginners realize the importance of the proper feeding of fowls. The general idea among people is, that for themselves, their children, and everything that they wish to have in a flourishing and healthy condition, the more they can eat, and the oftener the better. Now nothing is more absurd than this. Everyone knows that his limbs need rest after long exercise of toil; everyone knows that his head needs to lose its strain of thought and calculation in sleep; we all know that oxen and horses cannot go on interminably with work. But the human and the animal stumach is, by the common consent and the common conduct of the mass of the people, supposed to be indestructible. Digestion in that organ may "go on," like the brook, forever. And, while all the rest of the bodily machinery is relaxing its working functions in sleep, the stomach must go on digesting the mass that is absurdly forced upon it, and never rest from its labors. There is little use in talking to the average person about the use and abuse of that important organ, nor will the dyspepsia and the thousand ills that come of its cruel treatment teach them better, but for the best management of his live farm or barnyard stock there is some hope. He will listen to reason there; and so, with the benevolent conviction that we are doing good, we proceed to state what experience has taught us, and many other people, about feeding poultry. Never throw to them masses of food to be gobbed up, till the swelled crop can hold no more, and they stand moping about, with no disposition to move or seek any of the aids to digestion and health which they would seek if not already stuffed to repletion. Feed often in small quantities and in variety. Hide grains of wheat or millet under chaff, broken straw, forest leaves or other litter, and let them hunt it out. Show judgment that if you do not care to take it to your own dinner table.

ORANGEBURG, N. Y.

The show held in connection with the above Rockland County Fair,, at Orangeburg, N. Y., was what one might call "A howling success," each and every class being red hot in competition, in the Marrea Rock class some fine birds were on exhibition by Messrs Snazck, Klee & Patterson. The Wyandotte class (all varieties), having a complete full entry, and all showing fine birds. The Light Brahmas of Messrs Klee Bros., also being one of the chief attractions at the show. The Pigeon class and Pet stock being exceptional of a very high class, among the many fancy varities we find the name of Jas. Glasgow, of Mahuah and the Hall Farm, Granewille with the Jacobus. The Bantam exhibit was very large, all classes of the small variety being well represented, the Cochin (all varieties) and Brahma and Polish, by Dr. J. T. Gilchrese, Nyack, and the Game Bantams from the well known Mountain Side Lofts, Mr. Jas. Patterson, of West Nyack, showed a very exceptionally fine string of Standard Game, and the Water fowl exhibit of Ed. Morris's and E. L. Tallman, Nyack, being among the many attractions. Pheasants and Guinea Pig or Cavie, being also in great quality, in fact it is the largest show ever held under the management, filling three large tents, the attendance averaging 5,000 per day, and on Thursday 15,000. The list of special prizes was the best and largest ever offered by a Poultry Show.

Below are the awards:

LIGHT BRAHMAS.—Pair fowl 1, chicks 1, Klee Bros.; chicks 2, Hahring; pair fowl 2, Haring; pens, fowl 1-2, Klee; chicks 1, Haring.

DARK BRAHMAS.—Pair fowls 1, chicks 1, Tallman.

BLACK LANGSHANS.—Pair fowls 1, Tallman; pen fowls 1, Freeburn.

BARRED ROCKS.—Pair chicks 1-2, Swayck; pair fowls 1-2, Patterson; pens fowl 1-2, Klee; chicks 1, Klee.

BUFF ROCKS.—Pair fowls 1, Glasgow; 2, Williamson; chicks 1, Glasgow; 2, Demarest; pens fowl 1, Glasgow; 2, Tallman; chicks 1, Glasgow; 2, Williamson.

WHITE ROCKS.—Pair chicks 2, Demarest; 1, Rusch; fowl 1, Tallman; fowl 2, Rosenthal; pens fowl 1, Tallman; fowl 2, Haring; chicken 1, Haring; 2, Rosenthal.

SILVER WYANDOTTE.—Pair fowls 2, Morriss; 1, Patterson; chicks 1, Patterson; pens chicks 2, Morriss; 1, Patterson; fowl 1-2, Patterson.

GOLDEN WYANDOTTE.—Pair chicks 1, Tallmann; 2, Morriss; fowl 1-2, Morriss; pens, all to Morriss.

WHITE WYANDOTTES.—Fowl 1, chicks 1-2, Patterson; fowl 2, Rusch; pens fowl 1, Rusch; 2, Gilchrest; chicks 1, Rusch; 2, Morriss.

BUFF WYANDOTTES.—Chicks 1-2, Ackerman; fowl 1-2, Morriss; pens, all to Morriss; pair Wyandottes, pair fowls 1, Tallmann; 2, Morriss; chicks 1-2 and pens, Morriss.

COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTES. —Pair chicks 1, Patterson; pens fowls 1, Patterson; chicks 1, Sunkenberg.

BLACK WYANDOTTES.—Pair fowls1, Morriss; chicks 1-2, Morriss; pens fowl 1-2, Gilchrest; chicks 1, Morriss.

SILVER PENCILED WYANDOTTES.—All to Klee.

R. I. RED S. C.—Pair chicks 1, Patterson; 2, Boyd; fowl 1-2, Patterson; pens fowl 1, chicks 1-2, Patterson; fowl 2, Barz.

R. I. RED. R. C.—Pair fowls 1, Tallman; 2, Barz; chicks 1-2, Rusch; pens fowl 1, chicks 1-2, Rusch.

MOTTLED ANCONA.—Pair fowls 1, pen 1, Tallman.

WHITE ORPINGTON.—Pair chicks 1, Rice; 2, Roenthal.

S. G. DORKING.—Fowl 1, Boyd; 2, Morriss.

BROWN LEGHORN, S. C.—Pair chicks 1, Barz; 2, Boyd; pair fowls 1, Boyd; pens fowl 1, Boyd; 2, Barz.

BROWN LEGHORN, R. C.—Pair chicks 1-2, Castnee; pair fowls 1, Tallmann; pens fowls 1, Gilchrest; 2, Tallmann; chicks 1, Castnee.

WHITE LEGHORN, S. C.—Pair fowls 1, Rusch; 2, Boyd; chicks 1, Patterson; 2, O'Dowd; pens chicks 1, O' Dowd; 2, Patterson; fowl 1, Patterson; 2, Castnee.

WHITE LEGHORN, R. C.—Pair fowls 1, Tallman; 2, Gilchrest; pair chicks 1, Gilchrest; pens fowl 2, Gilchrest; 1, Tallman; 1, Gilchrest; 2, Tallman.

BLACK LEGHORN.—All to Gilchrist.

BUFF LEGHORN.—All to Ackerman.

BLACK MINORCHA, S. C.—Pair fowls 1, Klee; 2, Rusch; pair chicks 1, Haring; 2, Klee; pens fowl 1-2, Klee; chicks 1, Klee; 2, Rusch.

BLACK MINORCA, R. C.—Pair chicks 1, O. F. Cook; pens fowl 1, Tallmann; chicks 1, Williamson.

ANDALUSIAN.—All to F. Helinke.

BLACK SPANISH.—Pair fowls 1, Tallmann.

W. C. B. POLISH.—All to J. T. Gilchrest.

IN ACCORD WITH GAMEWELL.

Editor American Fancier:

As an exclusive breeder of Single Comb Black Minorcas for the past twelve years I was much interested in the article written by Mr. J. A. Gamewell, on "The Future of the Black Minorca."

I am in entire accord with Mr. Gamewell's views on the infusing of foreign blood to obtain size, and right here will give an account of a little experience that I had in the fall of 1904. A breeder in my state, Massachusetts, requested me to call on him and pass judgment on some Blacks, about eight weeks old, hatched from eggs purchased from two breeders; several of the lot were typical Langshans in shape and featherings; the other lot, some of which had green legs, by their shape, left no doubt in my mind that Indian Game blood had been infused.

Yes, the breed is being ruined by the introduction of foreign blood; larger but coarser birds, smaller and tinted colored eggs, and losing that typical form that the Minorca shoulld possess.

In my opinion it was a grave mistake in raising the standard of weight of this variety, and it should be placed back where it originally was and rightly belongs. If this is done it will contribute largely to the future of the ideal bird.

My experience in regard to color, in having birds raised in different localities, is that coloring matter, in mineral water, and grit have much to do with the coloring of the plumage.

We have one of the finest varieties in this country, but it will not long remain so unless something is done along the lines of which Mr. Gamewell speaks.

I hope to see a free and friendly discussion of this subject, as I believe all will be benefited thereby.

GEORGE H. DEXTER,

Everett, Mass., Sept. 8, 1906.

Mr. J. B. N. Fitch, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., has disposed of all of his Bantams and entered the ranks of Buff Wyandotte breeders. The fine string of Buff Cochin Bantams were purchased by Gedney Farm, White Plains, N. Y., his famous black Cochins by Mr. F. E. Fero, Mt. Vernon, N. Y. Bantam fanciers will regret to lose such a thoroughbred chicken crank as Mr. Fitch is known to be, and the Buff Wyandotte breeders can rest assured that they have in their fold a most aggressive and honorable member, who believes in a square deal first, last and all the time. We are personally more than pleased to see an old fancier and erstwhile poultry writer enter the ranks of Buff Wyandotte breeders with a determination to bring that breed to the top, and at the same time get the Buff Wyandotte Club to "hump itself" to bring out all the exhibits, big or little, at future shows.

The Poultry and Pigeon Show at White Plains, New York, last week, was a fine object lesson of how to run a show. It was the worst mixed up mess we have ever seen at a first-class fair. It was intended to be the best of its kind, and it was no fault of the Westchester County Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association that it failed to meet expectations. This, new organization was organized for the purpose of improving conditions in the poultry department of the Westchester County Fair. Most liberal and valuable cash specials and silver cups were offered, and, notwithstanding an entry fee of one dollar a bird, a large and splendid entry of very choice birds was the result. That part of the play was a success; the cooping and management of the birds was not, and thereby hangs a tale.

It was naturally supposed that Secretary Harris, of the Poultry Society, would have full charge of everything, but it seems the very much in evidence Secretary Long, of the Agricultural Society, was the whole shooting match. He delayed ordering coops until the very last miuute, and when the latter did arrive twenty-four hours late, was not particularly liberal in having them drawn from the freight depot, preferring to send his county poor house team, with a pair of "maniacs," as most people called the two helpers to assist in the work of carting. Fred Harris was simply swamped with shipping coops containing valuable birds, and no place to put them. They had to stay out doors exposed to the intense heat prevailing during the first two days of the exhibition. It was Tuesday night before coops were up and in place. The consequence was every exhibitor made a dive for an empty coop, and it was a rough house classification. Imagine big coops containing Tonlouse Geese next to coops with Bantams and Pigeons and you get a fair idea of the mess everything was in. Mr. Stanton, who judged the pigeons was compelled to coop and classify his birds in order in order to get through the only day he had to spare for the judging, and it was night before he finished a most onerous job. It was noon of Wednesday before we could handle the poultry classes, and even then the birds were badly scattered. Thanks to the efforts of Messrs. Davey, Hayner, Corey and other exhibitors. Judging was made more satisfactory by their bringing the birds to empty cages to be judged. But it was intensely hot in the building, the latter being too small for the exhibtis, the roof especially being too low, while no adequate ventilation was provided for in the top. Birds suffered in consequence, several dying from the effects of the heat. The water fowl and Pheasants cooped in a tent fared better, but even they felt the need of better treatment. It was simply impossible for Mr. Harries to handle this big exhibit and also look after the dogs, especially when confronted with a coopless building and a helpless force. Members of the Westchester Poultry Club were highly indignant over the treatment received at the hands of Secretary Long and did not hesitate to say so. That some action will be taken regarding future exhibits at the Fair is certaiin and the indications are that the society will withhold its support in the future, unless allowed absolute control of the management of the poultry and pigeon departments. To an impartial observer, it looks as if Secretary Long prefers the old style show, all kinds of birds in all kinds of coops, and everything on the cheap order. The fanciers of Westchester County are exactly the opposite in this. Nothing is too good for them and their aim is a show equal in quality and management to Madison Square, Boston, or any other first-class winter show. These are the two conflicting forces that have upset the poultry fancy in Westchester County.

Of the birds at White Plains, only words of praise can be spoken, i. e., barring very few classes. The American varieties were simply a whole show in themselves. The Barred Rock classes brought out a beautiful lot of high grade specimens, notably the first pullet which in true color and intense even barring has not been approached in a long time, in fact we considered her one of the best Barred Rock pullets we have handled in some time and when fullly matured should hold her own in the best of company. The second was very similar and nearly as good. First cock a fine bird in color and barring, first hen a big one shown in great feather, second in moult but will beat first when in shape, as color and barring is clearer and stronger. First and second cockerels and first and second pens all of the blue kind that we all like but don't always have. Buff Rocks a strong class of old ones, notably winning hens which were very even in color. The winning pen of Buff Rock chicks was one of the best pens we ever saw at an early show. The birds were large, fine in shape and very even and sound in color. White Rocks, magnificent classes all along the line, notably first hen, which is a gem. Correct in shape, large in size, fine comb, excellent yellow legs and beak and spotless white plumage make her an ideal White Rock. The pens especially were far above the average, but when the winners names are read in the list of awards, the quality of the birds will be readily imagined.

Wyandottes came out strong in Whites, notably first cock, hen, cockerel and pullet and first and second pens. The pullet was really a star and well shown; the cockerel a very white bird, nice head and good in shape. Pens very even in shape and color. Goldens a fine lot. Silvers only had one hen, and not a bad one, but where oh where are the Silver Wyandotte breeders? To neglect this most beautiful and useful American variety is a positive sin. Buff Wyandottes were all to the cream, with no skim milk entries. It was a rarely good bunch, notably first hen which in fine color, nice type, good eye and head, is about as slick a bundle of feathers we have handled in some years. There were several pullets there that will make a mark at the later shows. They have the color and the type. A pair of Columbians and a few Partridge Wyandottes of good quality finished this division. Several good pens and single entries in Rhode Island Reds closed the American classes.

Asiatics were lost, strayed or stolen, only a pair of Light Brahmas appearing on the scene. They couldn't help winning. Leghorns came out strong and good in S. C. Whites; first cock, first and second hen, first cockerel, and first and second pullets all up to the highest notch in quality, notably the cockerel, a grand stylish bird with nice comb and lobes and white plumage. Winning pen a beauty. S. C. Browns only a remnant of what they should have been; another good breed neglected. Black Minorcas, large classes and surpassing in quality, in fact the best lot we have seen at an early show in many seasons. There were some very good Buff Leghorns, a few very good White Crested Black Polish, and some rattling good Indian Games, notably the first hen of latter, a grand bird in type and pencilling.

Bantams made a great showing, in the Buff Cochin classes especially. The latter were the hottest and strongest we have seen outside of Madison Square Garden. As many of the crack birds in the East are owned by the successful exhibitors at this show, it can readily be imagined what a crowd of the little beauties were present. First hen, and cup, a rare bird in type, small, perfect Cochin form, even color, great feathering. She is a star in a collection of stars. First cock a beautiful little fellow in shape and color. Some fine Partridge Black and White Cochins were shown, notably first White cock, a great little bird in type, with universal leg and toe feathering. Sebrights, very strong classes, notably first Silver pullet, a bird of very fine lacing in every section of the approved English type. Light Brahma Bantams very even in quality and a credit to any show. Black Rose Combs, small entries of good quality. Game Bantams a disappointment, the Black Reds not being well shown, old cocks being undubbed.

There was a great entry of Tolouse Geese and the quality was equal to the quantity, not a poor specimen being in the lot. Pekin Ducks, fine, notably first old and first young drakes and ducks. A big string of Mallards made an interesting exhibit. Mandarin and Wood Ducks, and a number of Pheasants furnished decidedly attractive features, one lone Bronze Turkey being the only member of a noble race of fowl to keep it from being entirely forgotten. Several Cavies proved amusing to the children. The awards will be found on another page of this issue.

THE FERRET.

(By G. W. Feltery.)

The ferret is of African origin and was from thence carried into Spain for the purpose of destroying the rabbits with which that country was overrun. From Spain its spread as a domesticated animal, and for hunting purposes is easily traced.

The natural color is a light yellow, but, as a result of a cross with the English fitchet, they are to be found in all the shades to a dark brown. The crossed or vari-colored specimens are larger than the true ferret, are more robust and more easily acclimated. The true ferret, as a native of the warm regions, is very sensitive to cold.

The first use to which ferrets were put was in rabbit hunting, and although still employed largely for this, the more common purpose for which they are bred and tamed is as aids to rat-catchers, by whom they are considered almost invaluable.

In selecting the breeding stock the following points should be kept in view: Head short from the eyes to point of nose; skull short and wide; neck long and slim; body long, not increasing in size toward the hind legs; back to be well arched, forming a semi-circle; tail long, straight and slender, free from bushy hair, and should be carried firm and straight, not loose and drooping to the floor; hind legs to be close and well set under the body, thus making the hinder parts small enough to pass through any hole that the body can pass; feet and toes straight and furnished with good nails. Other things being equal, e ferrets possessing these points will be the best workers.

When the breeding season arrives, which is usually in March, notice each female for developments. The habits of the ferret during heat and time of copulation are so nearly like those of the dog tribe that anyone familiar with the latter can readily determine how to proceed. The female is from three to six days coming to heat, and it continues about three days. All males take hold of the female as though he was going to kill her; and more so as he is in good health. Hence they should be put together only when the female is in heat. They go with young six weeks, and have from two to twelve at a litter, but six or seven are as many as can be raised without extra care. They usually have two litters in one season, and if the young are weaned at five or six weeks old the female will be in heat in about two weeks. Three or four days before the time for the female to litter give her a nest of clean straw that will conceal the young ferrets; the amount of straw used must be regulated by the weather. If the young are kept too closely bedded they may be subject to "sweats."

After the female has littered, the young should in no way be meddled with till they are ten to fourteen days old. If it be found necessary to examine the nest remove the female to some other hutch or room and draw out the box by means of a stick. Do not touch the box or nest with the hand, else the female upon being returned to her hutch will detect the handling of her young and as a consequence destroy them.

The general feeding of ferrets depends upon their use. The staple should be bread and milk, or mush and milk, morning and evening, just as much as they will eat up clean at the time of feeding. In cool weather the milk should be warmed. Raw animal food should be given them once or twice a week, avoiding old rats, as they at times poison the ferrets. This is the proper feeding for rabbit hunters; but if the ferret is kept for ratting it should be fed raw animal food, at night omitting the bread and milk. Keep water constantly before them. If they become too fat dilute the milk fed them with water, so their feed will be sufficient in quantity, but not rich. They should be always eager for their regular meal.

The ferrets should be handled from the time they are placed before the feed cup. Never tease them as it tends to make them snap at anything that moves before them. If they take hold with their teeth do not pull away from them, but push toward them, when they will let go. If necessary, put on thick gloves and let them bite. A short time will teach them to be handled without gloves.

To take hold of a ferret that bites, hold a piece of meat before it, when it will take hold of it and pull back. It can then be grasped around the neck, close to the head and about the front legs, when it cannot bite. Handle them often, as frequent handling will make them tame; and unless they are tame, they are unfit for work.

Ferrets will hunt when six weeks old. It is their nature to hunt and kill; hence if properly fed, are not apt to suck the blood of their victim and lie down and sleep, but will continue to hunt until tired out. Begin with the young by giving them half-grown rats. If half-grown rats are not available, and you have full-grown rats, the latter may be used after pulling out their front teeth. The first encounter with a rat is very important. If it occurs in a small place with a full-grown rat, the ferret may be so overfaced as to be timid ever after. It is not to be expected that the ferret will catch every rat when hunting, as the rat is swifter than the ferret, but when the latter is trained it is greatly improved. Place the rat in a room where it may have a chance to hide, put in the ferret, let every one be silent and the ferret have its way. Practical hunting will begin at once. It will be hard for the spectators to remain quiet, but it is imperative. When the ferret had caught and killed two large rats in this way, he may be considered ready for out-door work. A female weighing twenty-two ounces can follow them into their holes and do more rapid work than males weighing two and a half pounds.

To train for rabbit hunting, it is best always to put the ferret into a hole or burrow where the rabbit can escape, as the work of the ferret is to drive, not to kill. The good rabbit hunter should never be allowed to kill any animal. If a ferret has been fed specially for ferret-hunting it will not be necessary to muzzle him. The muzzle should not be used in rat hunting. It would be very wrong to deprive it of its only means of defense against an enemy so vicious as the rat; but should you choose to muzzle the ferret for rabbit-hunting, let it be done as follows:

Take a strong cord or fishline and tie it round the neck at the base of the skull as tight as can be without choking, leaving two ends of the string free and about two inches long. Take another string and tie it round the lower jaw just back of the tusks, with the knot on the underside. Bring the two ends of the string over the nose and tie again so the mouth shall be barely closed. Lastly, tie the two ends of the nose muzzle to the strings of the neck, taking care to take up any slack made about nose muzzle. Cut off all surplus string. If you have been at all careful in the ties, your ferret is muzzled for the hunt. The English call this "cooping." Ferrets can be carried in sacks prepared for the purpose; but all things considered, I prefer a box of half-inch lumber, five inches deep, nine inches wide and a foot long (outside measures), with a strap over the top by which to carry it. A sliding cover is most suitable. Ventilate the box with half-inch holes, one on each side, and six in the cover. Place in the box some fine straw or wool and the ferret is ready for a day's hunt.

Before putting the ferrets under a building for rats be careful to close up such holes as cannot be guarded, and in all ferreting keep strict silence else the animals pursued will not bolt. A dog should be trained to stand at the hole and patiently wait the hunted rat. It must be made familiar with the ferret, so as not to seize it if it came out instead of the rat. Dogs are readily used to ferrets and taught to turn from them. I had a bull dog that would allow the ferrts to climb over her. When a ferret has examined the premises it will come out, and can easily be picked up and put to test at some other place. In hunting rabbits a net is necessary. When the hole is found put in the ferret and place the net over the entrance. As the rabbit bolts it will be caught in the net and go rolling over and over. It can then be picked up, untangled, killed and bagged. The ferret will appear at the entrance and can be picked up for further work. I do not advise putting ferrets into sink holes. Many of these are barrel-shaped, and the ferret once in cannot get out.

After hunting with a ferret examine his feet. If any cuts or bruises appear, or nails are pulled off, wash the parts with vinegar, salt and alum; otherwise the wound may be spread till the animal is covered with the scab. Foot-rot is prevalent and highly contagious among animals kept in filthy hutches. A good home remedy is to rub the feet and toes with sulphur and lard, or sulphur and sweet oil, till the rot is softened, after which wash the feet with carbolic soap. One or two applications of pyroline oil will effect a cure. Sweats are common to young ferrets that have been too closely bedded. If they are weaned, wash them with carbolic soap and give them good food. As a rule, ferrets cannot be doctored successfully. If they seem to be ailing without apparent cause, change their food; also put a little sulphur in their milk two or three times, and give them a new apartment. Fleas may be driven off by the use insect powder or carbolic soap.

To The American Fancier:

It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,

Very respectfully,
ELLIS DUNTZ.

Glencoe Mills, N. Y., May 3, 1906.

Transplanting a brood of chicks is not uncommon, often necessary, for the past week I have been deluged with chicks from an unexpected source, as many as two hens with good sized broods showing up in a single day, a flock of eight were made orphans by an accident so I went to the pen where I confine the broody hens, and picked up a likely candidate for the job of foster mother, put hen and chicks in a barrel and covered them up, next day put them in a brood coop and after feeding and watering, kept them dark for another eight hours, since when everyhing has gone on pleasantly. I wish to make the point for future reference, that in flocks large enough to make a quota of broody hens imperative, the rearing of chickens by the natural process is absolutely within the control of the handler.

As I am on the subject, will discuss these chicks coming out at this unseasonable period. The question is, what shall we do with them, of no breed in particular, just the result of a chance mating while the fowls are running at large, they will never be of any value as breeders, and being unmatured when cold weather strikes them, it would seem the surest and quickest way to get the price of the eggs, spoiled by nature's interference with the old hen's duties as a layer, would be to turn these chicks into broilers.

A fancier writes me his chicks contracted roup at the fair, probably a cold with roup tendencies, and they do not need to go to the fairs to get the symptoms either; fowls that have never been within miles of a show have them. After a cold driving rainstorm, we expect these things, why an epidemic of colds shoulu break out during a period of continued fine weather is a mystery.

The man in this town who feeds in bulk and boast of everlasting layers has a kick coming at last. The hens have laid so many eggs they have gotten tired of putting shells on them. Thought a change would come sooner or later. We try to make machines out of our fowls. When the water runs out of the boiler she is bound to blow up; and a hen will not gorge herself with grain, eat from a pail of sour feed day in and day out, and lay the daily egg with routine regularity. We who feed bountifully and intelligently, furnishing all the ingredients calculated to stimulate egg production, clean quarters, grinding material, etc., cannot get them to do it; so why should a flock fed in a hap-hazard way, who never see an oyster shell or a piece of grit in their lives, who roost in foul buildings and surrounded by conditions not conductive to egg production lay steadily at a record breaking rate, perfectly formed eggs, has been an all season mystery to me.

An up-state breeder gives me this bit of history, which was quite a shock to me, as I thought the snide poultry dealer posing as a fancier, had passed from earth; using his own words, he says: "I wrote describing just what I wanted in a cockerel—and you may be sure I described a good bird—would not have been surprised if he had asked me ten dollars, but he said he could fill the bill for five, which I promptly sent, with a warning that the bird would be returned unless it came up to description. Well, I wish you could have seen him (I have a signed statement frfom three of our fanciers who examined him) long legged, faulty comb, crooked breastbone and off colored." Upon returning him and making two requests by mail for his money, our correspondent got it less a return charge more than one-third higher than the original, in a letter which ran something like this:—"You make enough fuss over the bird to have him worth $100.00; you could not expect a $25.00 bird for $5.00," etc. Now the purchaser in this case advertises in many poultry papers and pays for all he gets. The seller continually seeks free advertising and has gotten a lot of it in the last year. The former would be justified in laying the circumstance and the latter's dirty reply, seeking to justify a swindle with a bull-dozing bluff, before every paper he patronizes for them to take action upon, and possibly give the gentleman all the free advertising he is looking for.

RATHER SMART SPARROWS.

A gentleman bought a lot of chickens and commenced feeding them on rice, but could not make out what they did with the large quantities that were thrown down to them. He determined to watch. No sooner had the rice been scattered over the ground than a cloud of sparrows swooped down and made a splendid meal. There was one consolation, and that was the chickens would soon be "fowl" enough to eat Indian corn. Next morning came and he threw down corn, thinking he would be one in front of the sparrows. but no such luck. They came as usual and picking up the corn flew away with it to the railway, placed it on the rails, perched on the telegraph wires and waited for a train to come by and smash it! He has since given up keeping fowls for profit. This is not a Yankee yarn; it comes from Birmingham.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION—Send twenty-five cents and we will send The American Fancier for thirteen weeks to one address.

Hennes, As First Written About.

The following, taken from an old scrap book tells in language used in the days, when pure and undefiled English was still to do with hens:

If your henne will eate her eggs you shall onely lay for her nestegge a piece of chalke cut like an egge, at which oft pecking and losing her labour she will refraine the evil. If you would not have your henne sit, you shall bathe her often in colde water, and thrust a small feather through her nostrils. If you feed your hennes often with toasts taken out of Ale, with Barley boiled or splitted vitches, they will lay soone, oft, and all the winter. Because fat hennes commonly either lay their Eggs without shels, or at the best hand lay very small Egges; to keep them leane, and in good plight for laying, you shall mixe bothe their meate and water with the pouder of Tylesheards, Chalke, or else Tares, twice or thrice a weeke. Now for so much as no poultry can be kept either in health or safety abroad, but must of course be housed, you shall understand that your Henne-house would be large and spacious with somewhat a high roofe, the wals strong, both to keepe out theeves and vermine, the windows upon the Sunne rising, strongly lathed, and close shuts inward, round about the inside of the wals upon the ground would be built large pens three feet high, for Geese, Duckes and great fowle to sit in. Neare to the eavings of the house would be long pearches, reaching from one side of the house to the other, on which should sit your Cocks, Hennes, capons, and Turkies, each on severall pearches, as they are disposed: at the other side of the house in that part which is darkest over the ground pens, would be fixed hampers full of straw for nests, in which your hens shall lay their egges, but when they sit to bring forth Chickens, then let them sit on the ground, for otherwise is dangerous; let there be pins stricken into the wals, so that your Poultrie may climbe to their Pearches with ease: let the flore by no means be paved but of earth, smooth and easie; let the smaller fowle have a hole at one end of the house made to come in and out at, when they please, or else they will seeke roust in other places, and for the greater fowle the door may be opened Evening and Morning; this house would be placed either neare some Kitchen, Brewhouse, or else some Kilne, whare it may have ayre of the fire, and be perfumed with smoke, which to Pullen is delightful and wholesome. And thus much of the Cocke, Henne, Capon, and Chicken.

—"Commuter tells me he has named all his hens Macduff."

"How assinine! But why?"

"In hopes that they'll 'lay on'."—The Jester.

If the egg shells are fed to the poultry care should always be taken to crush them thoroughly before feeding.

It would be a good plan when the fowls are moulting to give tincture of iron, one tablespoonful to every quart of their drinking water.

Don't be dosing the well fowls.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts last Saturday were 6,093 cases; for the week, 63,450; since March 1, 2,964,889. The official prices of extra firsts and firsts were advanced ½c, owing to the continued scarcity of these grades and good demand for a quality suitable for high-class trade. The position of medium and under grades does not improve. The offerings are liberal and prices are entirely too various to quote. Trade during the latter half of the week was of poor volume, as Jewish buyers were celebrating their holidays and the quality they generally require accumulated. The movement in refrigerator eggs has been rather dormant, as the weather has been too warm to place the stock into consumption with any degree of safety.

DRESSED POULTRY—Receipts last Saturday were 594 packages; for the week, 9,658. The feature of the market during the week was the actual scarcity of fine fowls. At times sellers refused to fill orders unless buyers were willing to take a fair proportion of chickens. Clear lots were generally held above quotations. Chickens of medium size accumulated freely and closed weak. During the latter half of the week, Jewish buyers celebrated their holidays, which resulted in extreme dullness in all quarters. Large quantities of nearly all varieties were carried over. Spring turkeys are dragging at weak prices. Large sizes of squabs are steady to firm. Spring geese are well sustained at firm prices.

LIVE POULTRY—Receipts for the week were 52 cars, of which three cars were left on the track. Absence of Jewish buyers from the market since Thursday placed the market at a standstill, and in the absence of sales of any size, quotations were more or less nominal. The tone, however, on all grades of weighing stock was rated steady.

To The American Fancier:

The American Fancier is the ONLY paper to advertise in. It has sold me birds and eggs over fourteen hundred dollars worth. The only reason I stopped my advertisement was that it was selling me out too fast. Have shipped eggs to every State in the Union; also, several lots to Canada. Wishing you success, and long life to the eagle, I am,

Most truly yours,

CHAS. H. BRUNDAGE.

Danbury, Conn., April 27, 1906.

Moulting a disease? Not much. Some would have us absorb such nonsense, however. Well, what is it then? Nothing but a natural law which the physical economy must obey. True, the system is put to a strain to replace the old, worn out dress, but abundant nourishing food will meet the demand.

There is a big demand for Homer crosses at the present time, and whether designed for culinary or sporting purposes, they can be made exceedingly profitable for the raiser. Squabs at the present time are on the menu of every first-class restaurant. The sporting fraternity find use for the old birds as targets for their shooting matches.

The Brockton Show, one of the largest and best managed fairs in the country, will be held October 2d to 5th. Pigeons will be exhibited in a new building with a capacity of 1,400 single exhibits. We understand Mr. Jesse M. Ruths will place the awards in "Fantail Alley" and this should assure a large turnout in these classes.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Pigeon Fanciers Association was held in the poultry building, Canadian National Exhibition, September 3d, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Hon. President, Dr. A. W. Bell, Winnipeg; President, C. F. Wagner, Toronto; 1st Vice-President, F. A. Woodward, Toronto; 2d Vice-President, J. W. Benson, Midland; 3d Vice-President, A. Readwin, Guelph; Secretary and Treasurer, R. Scott, Toronto. Messrs. H. and J. G. Smith, of Syracuse; Donovan, of Brooklyn, and Samuels, of Buffalo, were among those present.

The secretary of the Dragoon Club has mailed to all members voting slips for selection of judge, also place for holding the anual meeting. Dragoons, so far this season, have shown up well at the different fairs and the quality has been above the average shown generally at the early shows. Hagerstown, Md., and Brockton, Mass., will have a good entry in these classes and the competition will be very warm. Messrs. J. H. Barcklow, Pawtucket, R. I., and H. R. Miller, Hagerstown, Md., have recently joined the Dragoon Club.

Rats are a great nuisance around a pigeon loft. To get rid of them is a difficult matter, as the deadly enemies of the rat often are deadly enimies of the pigeons. Rats are very fond of sunflower seed, and the latter will tempt them to walk into a trap when all other bait fails. A steel skunk trap is about as good as any.

FLYING PIGEONS.

There is not a title the pleasure in possessing an aviary of fancy pigeons compared to that of having a few flying birds. To begin with, it is always pleasanter to have one's stock loose if possible, for though cats and accidents may carry off a certain number, one feels that the birds are living under more natural conditions, are happier, and, therefore, better in every way for the freedom and exercise they get. Of course, one would not suggest giving very valuable fancy stock their freedom, but homers and flying tumblers may be let out safely enough when once settled, and they are both flyers. For the stay-at-home fancier who has but small chance of training his birds, the tumbler will probably prove the most suitable. A flight or kit, as it is called, of these is an interesting possession, and one which affords plenty of amusement. The general aim of the tumbler fancier is to have a kit of birds which will go high into the air, so high that they appear just to be mere specks, and there remain for hours. Now, there is interest in breeding birds that can do this, and the whole business is highly scientific, yet probably most amateurs will find more amusement in possessing some performing birds. These are the curious pigeons which have given this variety its name, the birds which tumble in the air in that strange fashion which has puzzled all the great scientists who have tried to solve the problem as to why the birds should behave in this extraordinary fashion. Then there are the tipplers and the rollers, subdivisions of the same family, birds which tumble in different ways. None of our English varieties are quite as curious as some in India, which are said to literally roll along the ground, but they are very strange for all that, and when one realizes that they are absolutely healthy and that their mid-air performances apparently cause them no inconvenience one need not hesitate to keep these interesting and strange birds. But, of course, the flying pigeon of the greatest popularity is the homer, and all who have an opportunity of doing so should most certainly go in for the delightful hobby of breeding and training these birds. The pastime is immensely popular, and though it is not possible for every live stock lover to indulge in it, there must be a great many who could if they like, especially those who live in the outskirts of towns or in the country, though, of course, many of our best flyers are bred and trained in the thickly populated districts.

DOVES.

Of the Columbidae, or Doves, that are found wild in this country, says a writer in a London newspaper, the Wood Pigeon, or Ring Dove, the Rock Pigeon, or Dove, the Stock Dove, and the Turtle Dove do not adapt themselves satisfactorily to confinement. But many of the foreign doves are extremely beautiful, and make admirable inmates of the aviary. The Barbary, or Collared, Dove has been well known for years, often erroneously, under the name of Ring Dove. It is a pale fawn in color, with a black line in a half circle at the back of the neck. This Dove is often to be seen in the bird fanciers' shops, and frequently in private life in wicker cages. It will breed freely in a cage, but it does much better in an aviary. It will breed throughout the greater part of the year, and has become so well acclimatised, and is so hardy, that it will live out of doors during the most severe winter. Earthenware pigeon nest pans, in which a little sawdust is placed, will do well for nesting purposes. In fact it can be treated very much as are ordinary domestic pigeons. Some people allow these doves their liberty. They will fly about and settle in the trees, returning to feed their young ones and to roost in their house. A dove that runs the Barbary close for favoritism is the Java, a pure white bird, in shape and size much like the former, to which it is related. it is a free breeder and quite hardy. The male and female are alike in appearance, the male being slightly larger. A very charming little dove is the Zebra dove. This bird is not larger than a thrush, and is gray in color, marked with black lines or bars. Hence its other name of the Barred Dove. It is fairly hardy, nesting and laying freely in this country, and rearing a fair proportion of its young in warm seasons. The Diamond Dove comes to us from Australia, a sweet little bird about the size of a sky-lark. The color is lilac grey, the wings dotted over with white spots. The under parts are of a delicate pearl grey, the feet being flesh colored. The Diamond Dove will breed in captivity, but not very frequently. It does well out of doors in the summer months, but is scarcely hardy enough to stand the rigours of our winter in the open. The Vinaceous Turtle Dove is another member of the family well suited to the aviary. It will nest and breed freely in his country, soon becoming tame and friendly.

A beautiful dove, with a disagreeable name, is the Bleeding Heart Dove, or Blood,breasted Pigeon. The name is derived from a large claret colored spot on the breast, like a dagger wound. The French call this dove the 'Colombe Poignardee.' The general plumage is of subdued shades of blue, grey and purple. Other handsome and suitable doves for the aviary are the Cambayan Turtle Dove, and the Necklace Dove.

GRIT AS REGARDS FEEDING.

Read Before Manchester Columbarian Society by Herbert Porter.

My attention has for some time been given to the question of Grit, as an important item in the diet of Pigeons, not only from the general idea that it supplies means of mastication and digestion, but as supplying salts that are necessary to the bird, both for building up the frame, and for the production of feather growth, as well as assisting in producing the brilliant colors, or sheen, so much desired by fanciers.

The most important point in breeding is the food. This question has often been discussed, and is generally understood, but the supply of grit is quite as important, and may have, in some respects, a more important part to play, in the condition of the birds plumage. The composition of an egg, has been clearly established, and when we know that it consists of albumen, soda, caseine, fitrine, and lime, we are better able to know how to feed for egg production, and how to supply the necessary materials for building the frame of the squab in embryo.

The bone consists chiefly of lime, as phosphate, sulphates, and carbonate, the ingrediments being obtained from the food, to a great extent, but are supplemented, no doubt, by the supply of grit, and when birds are kept in confinement, the grit box is of the utmost importance, in keeping birds in good condition, and I shall show later on, in probably assisting in producing that finish, so much desired for the show pen. When we come to consider the amount of lime in a pair of eggs, and to remember that this amount of lime has to be supplied through the system of the hen bird, inside of ten days, it is clear that every assistance should be given in supplying the lime, and to supply it in the most suitable form. Having good food, and having produced strong healthy youngsters, we next want them to show condition and color, necessary for showing, and in order to be able to do this, we want to know something about the composition of feathers.

Birds that feed on grain, differ from other kinds of birds, from the fact that their feathers contain a considerable amount of silica, as the following table will show:—

Birds fed on	Ash of feather	Silica
Seed.	4.84 per cent.	1.98
Fish.	2.41 per cent.	.23
Flesh	2.16 per cent.	.64
Insects and Berries..	2.62 per cent.	.75

It will at once be noticed, that Pigeons coming under the first heading, have a very high percentage of ash, and silica, compared with the feathers of other birds. Also the feathers of old birds have more silica than the feathers of young birds, and we know that old birds, have more sheen or gloss than young birds, and this may be the reason why the ash of feathers contain lime, sulphur, phosphates, and silica, and the pigment that gives the color. Mother of pearl has a beautiful appearance known to everyone, and it gives off different colors, when exposed to different lights, or when moved about, and mother of pearl, contains 66 per cent of carbonate of lime. Artificial stones of beautiful brilliancy are produced by the powerful compression of fine particles of various salts, or glass which gives the rays of light, so valued in precious stones. Pigeon feathers may have the same property of giving various rays of color, or in other words, they have the power of splitting up the light, as it strikes their surface, into various primary colors, yellow, green, blue, etc. The same thing happens when the sun shines on some glass ornament, and produces the colors of the rainbow, or spectrum, and it is probable, that minute atoms of silicul, and carbonate of lime contained in the feathers, produces this effect, and not the presence of a variety of colors, or pigments.

I was asked why birds in hot climates have such brilliant plumage? Why does not the sun fade the colors? And my answer is, that probably the brilliance is due to these minute particles as mentioned, which cannot fade, as they only split up the light.

The pigment or coloring matter possibly is responsible for the presence or absence of these atoms of silica and lime, in the same way as the constitution is responsible for the coloring matters. All animals and birds loose their bright coloring quickly when out of health.

It may be mentioned here that the pigment of feathers of a dark or black color is slightly soluble in water, but insoluble in alcohol, while the pigment of feathers of a light color is not soluble in water, but slightly soluble in alcohol or ether. Some time in the future I may be able to state what is the best form in which to give silica, but for the present will give the mixture of grit that I have found the best, and one that has been selected by the birds themselves in preference to other mixtures placed before them:—Small flint grit, 1 pint; lime (whitewash), 1 pint; sand, 1 pint; soil (earth dried and sifted), ½ pint; salt, ¼ pint. A lump of whitewash and a lump of rock salt are also placed for the birds to peck it. The flint should be fine, so as not to be difficult to young birds to swallow. This, I think, is most important, for if a young bird stops feeding when being fed, it often stands a chance of having to go without, and the old birds get disgusted; also I think a small grit as useful for digestion in Pigeons as larger grit, as it gets more incorporated with the food.

In conclusion, I cannot too strongly advise the free use of carbonate of lime for many reasons too numerous to go into here—but do not confuse caustic lime with carbonate—caustic lime is fresh, that has been slaked, and perhaps exposed to the air only a short time; birds will not eat this. In cases of foul crop or diarrhœa, carbonate of lime in water in a shallow dish, plenty of grit as above, and six to twelve hours in confinement alone will generally cure if taken in time.

RABBIT FARMING.

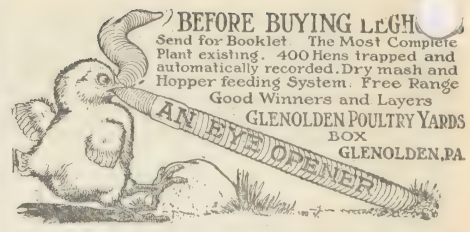
I suppose this is generally accepted as the most important question in connection with rabbits, and hence an occasional reference to it and jotting down of hints and notes is not inappropriate, albeit the jottings are fragmentary and disjointed.

There is something wanting yet in rabbit farming as a science, and what it is has never yet been decided. May I hint that a little more trouble in the way of domestication and improving the breed might not be wasted. Take, for instance, the case of a warren overstocked with small rabbits, would it not pay to increase the size by crossing so as to make the young ones old enough to kill at a smaller age? Thus, supposing it is found unprofitable to kill off the current season's produce at a lower age than twenty weeks, it is obvious that if the age could be reduced to thirteen, or about thirty-three per cent., there would at once be a large corresponding gain in the way of time and space; or, on the other hand, if it be found that the average weight of young ones at twenty weeks is four pounds, and that weight could be increased to six or eight pounds, the difference would change a ruinous loss into a substantial profit. Experience teaches that large rabbits do eat so much more than small ones as the proportionate size would indicate, and thus while by breeding revenue, he does not cause a corresponding increase in his expenditure.

The question is, what rabbit to use to increase the size. Belgian hares seem to meet the case, but they generally have the reputation of not being exceedingly fertile, which is of course, an objection in this case. But for all that I would say that a batch of Belgians turned down at intervals would be very advantageous, and in those cases where it has been tried it has answered. Of course, all will not take to the change of life, and even then for a time the breeding will be confined to the imported rabbits themselves, but by and by it will be found that the desired cross will take place, and the excessive fecundity of the wild rabbit may be relied on to check any adverse tendency in the Belgian.

Silver greys are first-class for turning down. Hardy and strong, well built and of good size, they take to out-of-door life well and quickly mix the aborigines. They differ from them less in general appearance than the Belgian hare, and this may account for a more rapid merging. The effect of the silver grey cross is a marked improvement in the fur, which in itself is a great feature, for an increase of three pence to six pence per dozen in the value of the skins means something very considerable in the course of the year. In point of size the breed is improved, but the weight is increased more than the bulk, owing to the greater compactness and firmness of the imported breed. I have noted the effects of a free introduction of "silver" blood and can testify to its being valuable in the extreme.

But there is something lacking in both these breeds in point of size. One should aim at a ten or twelve pounds standard in a rabbit farm or artificial warren, not in actual hopes of attainment, but as a mark to be got as near as possible. This doubling of the weight is of such manifest importance that it is difficult to overrate it, and one should look around to find, if possible, a means of getting near it. Ostend rabbits weigh, on an average, very much more than English wild ones; in fact, they are often as large, or nearly so, as hares. This seems strange in face of the proverbial smallness of the Dutch rabbit, but it must be remembered that much of the diminutive is actually obtained by being bred for, small Dutch being fashionable. In Leadenhall Market, at an early hour, one may often see heavy consignments of Dutch rabbits, large in size and sound in condition, and possessing such powers of reproduction as must commend them to any thoughtful breeder. If ever I can get a farm into going order I would stock very freely with these, although I suppose one must be content to make the prick-eared brown-grey animal the mainstay of the warren.



With the restless activity that should actuate every fancier, especially when the monetary question is at stake, I would go further, and try to improve upon improvements. The French have several large breeds, and of these I would turn down a few bucks, the prices being so prohibitive that a general adoption would be almost impossible, and a little Flemish giant blood would be good in the same way. Always on the lookout for size, a speculative man might in time almost stamp out the diminutive cast, for it is well known that in nature there is a striving after improvements, and that the deterioration of the better breed is not always, or generally, so marked as the improvement in the inferior one.

A simple and effective way of reaching the end I have mentioned is to freely introduce the large kinds of common rabbits—so called, it must be supposed, because no sensible name could be found for them. These common rabbits are the result of unlimited and unrecorded crossing—castaway lops crossed with something but one degree removed from the wild, and then crossed perhaps with a half-bred Belgian or another lop. The principle of general mingling of blood as opposed to in-and-in breeding is exemplified here to the utmost, and the result seems to be a general increase in the better qualities, such as hardiness and eagerness to breed. I have had in my time a nurse doe—a cross between a prize lop and a splendid Dutch doe (an accidental union, be it understood)—that was of good size, a splendid breeder and altogether a model rabbit; and others I have had which have thrown an occasional shaggy-haired youngster, as if to remind one that in days of yore it had an ancestor of the Angora type. Now these animals, turned down in profusion, should be useful in raising the standard of excellence in a warren. The manager of a farm I have occasionally visited had this idea, and systematically bred for turning down. His does numbered about twenty on the average, and were huge animals of all breeds and kinds. His hobby was to change his bucks frequently by purchasing large new ones, and turning down the sires which had done duty for a season with what one may be pardoned for calling brood does. He cared not whether he had lops or not; so long as the sire was good, he cared nothing. The young were carefully reared and removed at six weeks, when they were turned into an unused barn and liberally fed. As soon as they became three months old they were taken out into the enclosed warren, and soon mingled with the others. A general change in the appearance of the rabbits must follow this kind of treatment if kept up for a couple of seasons, but I am of opinion that it must be looked on as a perpetual work, or deterioration would set it from in-and-in breeding and the overwhelming proportion of small rabbits.

That the great weights obtained in hutches can be got in warrens is more than improbable, but a great improvement can and must be effected, or rabbit farming will not become a very profitable source of income.

I have had one or two queries as to turning down. There is always very great risk in turning hutch-bred rabbits, but the difficulty must be faced. Select dry and warm weather, and never by any chance put any down after a storm. Moreover, some little provision should be made in the way of shelter. With all precautions there will be losses, but these need not be numerous, for nature is a splendid physician, and wild scampers over the ground will heal many complaints that defy cure in confinement. At any rate, the experiment must be tried, and even with a good proportion of losses by death, there will be a handsome profit.—Cuniculus.

ONE MAN'S EXPERIENCE.

What an unlimited amount of excitement a fellow can get out of a few chickens, can only be experienced by one who has endeavored to start a poultry farm in his back yard, especially if he is in a thickly settled neighborhood. We paid $25 for a full blooded blue ribbon rooster and two hens and started to make our fortune by dealing only in fancy birds. We bought them in the fall and all it cost us for a hen house and feed for the winter (outside of numerous backaches, caused by shoveling them out of the snow banks and the loss of a few toes that were frost bitten, while giving our stock attention on the coldest nights), was $300 and we felt amply repaid for this, for during the five months we received seven fresh eggs. Spring came and we launched into the business, bound to reach success. We purchased a couple fine settings of eggs at $15 per, and after our hens had set for seven weeks with no sign of a chick, we decided that we must have placed the eggs under them in a wrong position. We let the hens rest up a bit then, for, oh no, we were not discouraged, but we thought they needed it. Here is where we made a grand mistake for in letting the hens rest we let them run. The next evening when we came home our neighbor Jones sat on our front porch and after a growled "Good evening" took us by the arm and led us out back of his house to where his cherished garden spot lay. "Look," he hissed, and we looked. Radishes, lettuce, spinach, in fact every sort of green goods was uprooted and strewn in every direction and large roomy depressions now occupied the spaces that had heretofore been masterpieces in the gardener's eye. "Well," we asked, "How did this happen?" "Those blooming fowls of yours!" Jones angrily answered. "This job will cost you $25 cold cash or a hail to court for harboring a nuisance, which is it to be?" We returned home $25 short, but still had faith in our pet theory. The next night when we entered the house Mrs. Brown, our other neighbor, and our wife sat weeping. We asked if any one was dead and Mrs. Brown sputtered "No! but some one will be soon or I miss my guess. Look at those?" "Those" proved to be the muddiest, most bedraggled pair of lace curtains that we have ever noticed. With just a slight suspicion we again murmured, "How did that happen?" "Happen?" she squealed, "You know how it happened. I washed those this morning and placed them upon our

Pure-Bred Poultry on the Farm.

September is the month in which to assort the chicks. Pick out the best to carry over the winter and breed from next season. Many do not realize the importance of this; but the inferior chicks never pay for the food they consume. The balance of the flock will have more advantages after the culling has been made. More revenue will be gained from the remaining lot than from the entire flock if retained. It is now "fair" times, here and there. Select the best pure-bred poultry and exhibit them at the nearest fair, incite interest in well-bred poultry, if not already awakened, and show neighboring farmers what you have. If they have not as good, it will interest them, and you may sell some stock, or take orders for eggs for the coming season; besides the chance for carrying premiums. Next fair season some of the neighbors will enter into competition, and then you will want to maintain your ground with your second exhibit, and have an extra lot of fine birds to show. Farmers should learn the advantage of rearing thorough-bred poultry; by studying the exhibitions at fairs he familiarizes himself with good pure-bred poultry, and can compare it with his common stock, which results in giving preference to pure stock every time. Thus is laid the foundation and incentive within him to improve his stock. In time he will be found glorying in the possession of as fine a flock of pure-bred fowls as the surrounding country can boast. It is impossible to have too many interested in this matter, and the farmer especially should become familiar with the advantages of breeding and raising pure-bred poultry.

Seems Good to Him.

To The American Fancier:

It seems good to get the Fancier in the good old way, and there is but one "American Fancier," and that is when "Drev" is the Editor. We hope that all the cranks in hendom will do their little bit to push a good thing along.

Yours truly,

Standby for Years.

To The American Fancier:

We are more than pleased to see the old American Fancier by itself again. It has been our standby for years. It is the one that heads the line, favoring neither friend or foe, and when it comes to show reports, you have the whole thing, not "our patrons winning:" such reports are like reading a prospectus instead of the book, and, again, the news is fresh, brief and to the point. Long may her eagle live to scream.

Yours truly,
W. E. SAMSON.

lawn to bleach, and when I went to get them this is what I found. Every hen you own was right on top of them. Now sir, you can just pay me $30 for those curtains or I will sue you for it." We paid the 30 and she dragged her finery home. We began to think that there was money in chickens, i.e., for someone else. We hated to part with our blue blooded stock so gave them another trial. All things went well for a week or so, and we began to feel some of our old time elation, when, one evening at dinner time, the last straw was loaded upon our already heavy burden. Jones rushed in just as we had settled ourself to a cigar and the evening paper. He was white with rage and could hardly speak. "Come," he gasped, and we went. Jones' wife had prepared for company that evening, and had her large array of good things to eat spread out on tables in the summer kitchen. In some unknown manner the door to the kitchen had been opened and when we entered the sight was horrible. Celery, cheese and salads strewed the floor and four toed foot marks were printed in currant jam upon the white faces of mince pies. Cakes were garnished with mustard and Dill pickles floated in the cream pitchers. It was altogether one fierce looking mess of hash. "How did it happen?" We tremblingly asked. "Come," said Jones, "and I'll show you." Back of the summer kitchen lay our blue blooded fowls, every one with a broken neck. We were too full for utterance, so we picked up our birds and sadly wended our way homeward. The hotel bill for Jones's visitors' dinner cost us $87.64. From the moment we saw that last disaster we inwardly moved to never look at another feathered fiend. We could not even eat the birds, so we gave them to Brown, and no doubt he enjoyed his meal on account of his revenge sharpened appetite.—Exchange.

The American Fancier

VOLUME XXVI | JOHNSTOWN, N. Y., OCTOBER 6, 1906 | No. 670

TRENTON, NEW JERSEY

A GREAT SHOW OF FINE BIRDS.

[Special Report by J. Albert Lewis.]

At last the Fanciers' Poultry Association of New Jersey have had control of the Poultry Department of the Interstate Fair at Trenton, and what a change as compared to the old way of showing birds at county and state fairs. Trenton is now strictly a fanciers' show, carried on lines of winter shows.

It was quite noticeable on entering the Poultry Building, the apple-pie-order in which the worthy Superintendent and Secretary, Mr. T. Farrer Rackham, had the show arranged—so different from the days when birds were shown in their own shipping coops, piled one on top of the other.

The entry was not as large a one as I would like to have seen, owing, I should say, to the dollar entry fee, but where it lost in number, it certainly made up for it in quality. The one thing that the Fanciers' Association have always aimed at is a quality show, and it was there galore.

Among the exhibitors, we are glad to note the new blood that has loomed up, and it seems that they are making the old ones trot some. The old "stand-bys" were out in full force. Peapack Farm was there with its usually fine string of White Plymouth Rocks.

Rock Hill Poultry Farm showed some corkers, and made things lively for the Jersey boys, their string of Silver Pencilled Plymouth Rocks being simply fine. "Link" Orr came down with his Columbians. Geo. Fox had it out with R. L. Hutchings in the Buff Rock alley. Walter Bliss ran the White Crested Black Polish alley all his own way, as did Miss Sophia Pitchly in the Brown Leghorn classes.

Banner Poultry Yards were on hand with their Andalusians, and Artist Graham made up the Buff Cochins.

W. W. Kulp came all the way from Pottstown with his R. C. Brown Leghorns. His Blacks are corkers.

Peapack Farm seems to have taken a liking for Silkies, judging from the string they showed.

E. L. Tallman came down from Nyack with a nice string of Water Fowl, but he was not alone: F. D. Baerman, F. W. Miller, M. Yohn had some, too.

Llewellyn Poultry Farm made a large entry in Minorcas and Bantams, and Mr. Dean seems to be glad he came. I wonder why?

Louis Anderson, Bloomsburg, N. J., let the Rose Comb Rhode Island Red boys know he was there, but there were others that got in, too. Chas. R. Applegate, Arthur Croft, Bert Conklin and others had something to say.

Chillmark Farm, Samuel Burhans, Col. Perrine, Foot and Wentzien, and Hon. Dunn did not stay away with their good birds in the Orpington classes.

In Buff Wyandottes, Blue Barred Farm, Wm. Edgar, So. Bethlehem, Pa., R. Harrison of Clayton, New Jersey, had it out good.

Deacon Sparks sent his usual good [illegible]ite Wyandottes, but where, oh, where was he? We never knew the Deacon to be absent himself from a New Jersey Show before. Where, too, was the worthy Treasurer of the Association, Miles Hanchatt, with his Indian Games?

R. W. Costner, of Norwood, N. J., saw fit to enter only one pullet, but it was lucky for others in the Barred Rock circle that he did, judging from that one bird.

In going over the classes, I jotted down the following:

BAMBERGER CHALLENGE CUP

Won by Peapack Farm's White Plymouth Rocks at Newark, N. J., 1906

Brahmas and Cochins, few but good young birds, well-matured.

Barred Plymouth Rocks, good throughout. 1st hen, a gem. Cockerels a good lot, large, well-feathered birds for this time of year. Pullets a fine class, the winner not only having good barring, but a grand-shaped bird, and a credit to the owner.

Buff Plymouth Rock classes very good. 1st cock out of feather, but buff all over. 1st hen a gem in shape and color. Winning cockerel a beautiful bird.

White Plymouth Rocks, the largest entry New Jersey ever had, bringing out some noted winners in old birds. 1st cock well worth the place. 1st hen in fine feather and good shape, well shown. 1st cockerel, large,very white, shapely bird, good enough to win at a winter show. Pullet 1st won the Ivory Soap Special for the whitest bird. The pullet class was extremely good throughout.

Silver Pencilled Plymouth Rocks, not a large entry, but some noted winners were shown.

Silvers and Goldens, a small entry. What has become of the Silver and Golden Wyandotte breeders?

White Wyandottes, a large entry as usual. Old birds in good condition, and well-shown. 1st hen an easy winner, 2nd too long in body. 1st cockerel a large shapely bird, and snow-white. Award was well placed, although the 2nd was not far behind. 1st pullet, a perfect gem, in a class by herself. She won the Special for the best-shaped female Wyandotte in the Show.

Buff Plymouth Rocks, not a large entry, but quality made up for that, for there was not a poor bird among them all.

Partridge Wyandottes, only a few, but good Columbian Wyandotte class. The latter was certainly a stunner for quality, with all birds in good condition, beautifully marked, and good Wyandotte shape.

R. I. Reds, both Single and Rose Comb, a good entry and quality way up. Some great-colored birds were beaten because there were not enough awards to go around.

Orpingtons a very good showing for a fall show. S. C. Buff and Blacks, the strongest classes in which were some excellent birds. Old in good feather, and young well matured.

S. C. Brown Leghorns. Male birds both old and young not quite up to the scratch. Too much purple barring,but in females the best quality I ever saw. Hens in good feather and grand color. Pullets, large and even better color than the hens. All of the first and second females were well-shown.

Single Comb White Leghorns, a large entry and some very good ones, too. I cannot altogether agree with the judging, for in my mind there were some unplaced birds that should have been in the money. 1st cock, very bad head, second bird I think should have won. 1st hen more of a Minorca than a Leghorn. 2nd looks more like a White Game, and should not have been placed, as she was a very sick bird. 3rd should have been 1st and 5th, second. Cockerels, fifteen in number. 1st a gem, a little small, but a true White Leghorn, an easy winner. 2nd should not have been placed and what should have been 3rd and 4th did not get a place. Pullets, twenty-three in all, and unplaced pullet, pen 373, in my judgment should have been 1st easy; 2nd O. K.; 3rd, 4th and 5th all too yellow, other better ones not placed.

Single Comb and Rose Comb Buff Leghorns, a good entry with some corking good specimens shown in Single Comb cocks; hens good, cockerels a fine lot, and awards well placed. 1st pullet large, but too much black in tail, should have not been better than third. 2nd a gem, should have been 1st easy.

Rose Comb Brown Leghorns, few, but good. S. C. Black Minorcas, a good lot throughout.

Andalusians, good as usual, some strikingly fine birds being shown.

Silkies, the largest and best entry I ever saw, there being twenty-four single classes and three pens.

JUDGE HUYLER'S REPORT ON TRENTON.

Buff Plymouth Rocks made a fine showing. Mr. Geo. Fox and Mr. R. L. Hutchings divided honors. 1st and 2nd cocks were the best we have seen this season, with that nice, even shade of Buff that we are looking for. 1st and 2nd cockerel, and 1st and 2nd pullet, 1st pen, all going to the same firm. They were well worthy of the place, for one would have to go a long way to find six better colored birds. Single Comb Rhode Island Reds brought out a nice class. 1st cockerel and 1st and 2nd pullet, 1st pen, all going to the same firm. They were well worthy of the place, for one would have to go a long way to find six better colored birds. Single Comb Rhode Island Reds brought out a nice class. 1st cockerel and 1st pullet stood out well above the rest, showing good size, and wonderful color. Indian Games and Lakenfelders were small classes, but quality made up for this. Silver Sebright Bantams ran high in quality, notably 1st pullet. Black Cochin Bantams brought out a cock and hen good enough to go anywhere. All the classes were very well filled for such an early show. FRED HUYLER.

MOST COMPLETE REPORT.

To the American Fancier:

I wish to compliment you on the excellent arrangement and publication of the awards at the State Fair, especially the pigeon department, which is the best arranged and most complete report I ever saw. W. H. MILNE.

Utica, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1906.

RAVENNA, OHIO.

(By B. J. Hill, Associate Editor.)

The poultry exhibit was this year twice the size of any former year, to be credited solely to the efforts of Mr. Harry Beck, the Superintendent. The most notable exhibit was that of Mr. Wm. Evans of Medina, Ohio, who showed a strong string of various varieties. iHs Game Bantams were especially fine. Mr. Evans breeds every variety he shows. Mr. Harry Beck, well-known as a Buff Rock breeder, has taken up Black Orpingtons and showed several birds that were simply grand. The awards were as follows:

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS—Cock 1 E. L. Horne, 2 Ford Seed Co.; hen 1-2 Ford Seed Co.; ckl. 1 Horne, 2 Ford Seed Co.; pul. 1 Horne, 2 Ford Seed Co.

RHODE ISLAND RED CLUB.

The Rhode Island Red Club announces that their new catalog is now ready for distribution. The book has been revised and contains a great deal of information relative to Reds that no breeder of Reds can afford to be without: The origin of the Breed, instructions to Judges, How the Reds Were Admitted, Points on Breeding, Will Reds Breed True, Defects and Dangers, Practical Side of Reds, Report of State Vice Pres. from various States, etc., etc., are some subjects discussed.

Besides an increased amount of advertising there is a roster of officers, a complete list of addresses of members arranged by states, By-Laws of the Club and Club Standard. The book in all contains about 120 pages.

The admission of the Reds to the American Standard of Perfection has given this already popular breed an additional boom which they certainly merit.

Copies may be obtained by enclosing ten cents to FAIR HAVEN, VT.

The Western Vermont Agricultural Society held their 23rd annual Fair and Poultry Show at Fair Mount Park, Fair Haven, Vt., Sept. 11 to 14. The show was not large in number, but included some very fine birds in all varieties. The pigeon and pet stock department was the largest in number and the best ever held in the western part of the state. The coming season we are looking for a much larger show and would be pleased to meet some of our brother fanciers. Date of show, etc., will be announced later in American Fancier. R. BROWN, Supt.

MINORCAS AT THE TORONTO SHOW.

S. C. Blacks surpassed all previous exhibits, both in numbers and quality. The Minorca alley was the centre of attraction, there being many lovers of this noble breed present.

In Single Combs, the 1st cock was large, with fine lobes, and good color, but carried tail a little too high. In good feather, which gave him his place. The 2nd cock had good lobes, shape, size and carriage of tail, but was just starting to moult badly. 3rd cock in grand shape, but lobes on the rough side no doubt counted against him. 4th cock a fine, large fellow, good lobes, color, and comb, but too high upon legs to suit the judge. 5th had fine comb, lobes, and color, but not as large as the others. 1st hen was a monster for size, good color, and in fine feather. 2nd hen had a good, deep body, excellent lobes, and good color, but was just coming out of moult. 3rd hen had a grand comb, fine color, and had a perfect Minorca shape. 4th hen, very large, fair comb and lobes, good color and shape, a little too leggy. 5th hen very fine hen, except for little grey on tip of flights. 6th hen improted, fine lobes and comb, but poor color. The 1st cockerel a dandy, almost perfect in color and shape, good size, grand, comb, as near the ideal as any one has gotten. 2nd cockerel, another fine one, its only fault being a comb of seven points. 3rd cockerel promises to be a fine one, right shape and color. 4th cockerel also a good one, his strong point being color. 5th cockerel a nice one all but back. 6th cockerel a nice one, but rough in appearance. Pullet 1, no doubt the best one ever shown in Toronto. Fully grown and is grand and in grand shape. 2nd and 3rd pullets were close up to first, being of the same type. 4th pullet grand one, with exception of lobes. 5th and 6th also good ones.

Rose Combs. Small class but great improvement in size. 1st and 3rd cock large, with fine shape, good color, with fair combs. Hen 1, a nice hen, winning on head points. 2nd hen very large with rough comb. Cockerels 1st and 2nd two fine ones. Pullets 1st, 2nd and 3rd, all promising chicks.

Whites. Another small class, no cocks. Hen 2nd fair one. 1st cockerel was about the best we have seen. Pullets, nice ones. This class was not up to former years. Sorry to see this noble breed drop back.

On our title-page this week will be found a most excellent illustration of Mr. John M. Martin's winning pen of White Wyandottes at the New York State Fair, Syracuse, September 10 to 15. The artist, Mr. A. O. Schilling, did justice to his subject. It was our pleasure to handle Mr. Martin's birds at Toronto and note their fine blood lines. The record made at the great Canadian Show was even surpassed at Syracuse. Intelligent mating and breeding, together with a systematic course of feeding and handling, are bound to produce results. Mr. Martin is a gentleman of intelligence, a devoted fancier and experienced poultryman. His birds reflect all three qualifications.

The illustration on page three of this issue of the Bamberger Challenge Cup brings to mind the excellent and persevering work of the winners of the latter, viz: Fred Huyler and T. Farrer Rockham, proprietors of the Peapack Farm of White Plymouth Rocks. Bred in line with extreme care and due regard for typical shape as well as white plumage, the Peapack White Rocks have come to stay and are the most formidable competitors at our big Shows to-day.

Owing to an avalanche of copy we are compelled to hold over our Poughkeepsie Show report until next week. Suffice it to say, it was the greatest show ever held at the Dutchess County Fair. Full particulars in our next issue.

The Allentown Fair proved a record breaker this year from every standpoint. Poultry and pigeons were more numerous than ever before and if the entries keep on increasing the way they did this year, Superintendent W. Theo. Wittman will have the biggest show of birds to handle ever assembled under one roof. They do things at Allentown, Pa., and they do them mighty well.

Poultry and pigeons at Trenton Inter-State Fair last week reminded one of the winter shows. The exhibits were in charge of the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey, with T. Farrer Rockham as master of ceremonies. The dollar entry fee was an innovation and although it kept a few timid fanciers from making entries, nevertheless brought out fine classes in most varieties. It was not a show for the traveling showman, as no money was in sight for him where there was no competition nor classes for the numerous sports and freaks that make up some of the collections owned and exhibited by the "Wandering Willies" of the poultry show business. The absence of the big strings can be explained by the fact that there was jucier picking of bigger plums elsewhere. This is a commercial age and exhibitors who show big strings are not in the game for their health; they want the "mazuma," every time. Besides, competition is likely to be a trifle too warm at shows of the Trenton standard.

Nearly every coop was filled, however, and although many more birds could have been crowded into the two buildings, it was better for all concerned that the entries were limited to a reasonable number. The American classes led in numbers, White Plymouth Rocks being leaders and filling many coops with as fine a bunch of this popular variety as we have seen this season. It was quality of a very high order all along the line, the five pens alone making a grand exhibition. First pullet was a remarkable bird in type, large, with pure white plumage; second and third of the same pattern. First prize cock a gem. Barred Rocks an excellent lot, notably first hen, shown in great feather, and first cockerel a beauty in color and fine barring. Buff Rocks, a very strong lot, especially the old ones, a number of well known winners being caged. The Silver Pencilled Rocks were decidedly handsome. The same can be said of Partridge Rocks.

Wyandottes were strong in Whites, the White Plains winners of last week repeating their capture of the blue ribbons in all classes but one. Buff Wyandottes, small classes but made up in quality what they lacked in quantity, winning females being especially fine. Columbian Wyandottes a very nice collection, showing decided advance in quality over previous exhibits. Only a few Silver Wyandottes were shown, but they were of a quality to wish that there might have been more like them to bring out this fine variety.

Leghorns were out in force, the Whites leading in numbers and teeming with quality in every class. The Browns were especially strong in quality, notably winning hens, which had that even soft brown color so much sought after in a high bred Leghorn. They deserved the appellation "Dainty Browns." It would be real nice, however ,to see larger entries in Brown Leghorns.

The other Leghorn classes were light, albeit of good quality. Minorcas and Andalusians were not as numerous as expected, although former had all classes filled with birds of good quality. The Bantam exhibits were not what they should have been in numbers, the Game Bantams especially dropping down to small classes for a show like Trenton. The quality, however, was first class, as might be expected in this neck of the woods. Ornamental Bantams were about in the same boat, only the quality in most of the classes, saving the exhibits from total disappointment. The most remarkable exhibit was that of Silkies. We do not recollect ever having seen such a large collection of these odd and attractive birds at any show within our recollection. And they were very fine specimens, too. There is a steady and increasing demand for Silkies and we are of the opinion that the proprietors of Peapack Farm have struck a good lead, when they took up the breeding of Silkies. The other varieties are commented upon in our show report.

There was quite an attendance of fanciers at Trenton and many expressed the desire to send good strings next year and help make this function the model fall show of the United States. That this can be done with the efficient management now in charge is obvious. All it needs is a little nerve on the part of exhibitors to start good and early to prepare birds for the show. It is the ambition of T. Farrer Rockham to make Trenton as important as the famous Dairy Show of England.

Canada's great winter show, "The Ontario," is slated to take place at Guelph, December 10 to 14. This is the function that is in the same class with New York and Boston of this country, and the Crystal Palace of the land of beef and plum pudding. It brings out the cream of the Dominion's best fanciers in the feathered line. To win a prize at the Ontario is considered a very high honor, and the bird that gets the blue ribbon there comes pretty near being a winner wherever shown. The management of this show is excellent, in fact, is not excelled by any other on this more or less shaky globe of ours. Classification and clerical handling of exhibits are reduced down to a science bordering on perfection.

The poultry press of Canada, as well as the poultry raisers across the border are making strenuous efforts to have the government replace the old poultry building with a larger and more modern one at the Canadian Industrial Fair. We learn from a semi-official source that the city of Toronto will through its representatives vote an appropriation of three hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting new buildings and that one of these will be devoted to poultry and pigeons. It is also stated that the dog-building will be greatly enlarged. This is good news, if true. It is almost needless to say that the buildings when completed will be the finest of their kind on this side of the Atlantic.

The New York State Fair needs new and larger poultry building. The present edifice is a shining example of what a poultry building should not be. It's too small and too badly lighted to show birds to advantage. It spoils the excellent cooping arrangements, which are the only commendable features in this department. The Empire State should be a leader in such matters and provide the most up-to-date building, liberal classification and premiums, systematic arrangements and a list of competent judges, second to none in the world.

The Gloversville, N. Y., show has been called off and the members of the Fulton County Poultry Club will take off their coats and work for the big show to be held in the neighboring city of Johnstown.

Mr. W. H. Mudge, Westerly, R. I., writes: "Can you through your columns furnish a remedy for that dirty disease, chickenpox, and at the same time give a clue to its cause. This district just now is teeming with it and it is the first time it has come to my notice. We have a case in both flocks, but a liberal application of "Salacea" has apparently balked it. I think, however, that something in the form of a blood purifier would be of great benefit and if you can suggest such, would be of great service to your readers. We have not had great success with chicks as regards numbers, but the quality is O. K., as we propose demonstrating when the winter shows come on. At an early date do as I ask regarding the above mentioned disease." Chickenpox has been quite prevalent this season, but usually in a mild form. Small doses of cream of tartar will cool the blood. Carbolated vaseline put on the combs and face sores will do the rest. Isolation is recommended for afflicted specimens, but some chickens will get it anyway, no matter what precaution is taken. Clean quarters, sound grain and pure water, which are conducive to good condition in fowls, will do more to prevent the disease than any remedy on the market will do to cure it. Chickenpox is usually prevalent in the more southerly sections of the United States and Europe. In the lattter sections it is usually quite severe on young fowls turkeys and pigeons; in the north a little care and quick treatment with vaseline will avoid serious damage. A great many pages have been written regarding the scientific causes and treatment of this disease, but as the doctors fail to agree on many points, we deem it best not to quote from the different authorities (?) on this subject.

There will be some radical changes at the Madison Square Garden Show, New York, next January. Secretary Crawford is hard at work revising the rules governing that great show and the indications are that the finest and best arranged exhibit of the feathered tribe ever caged in the Garden will be the result. All large fowl will be staged and cooped on the main floor and the entries limited to a certain number. No exhibitor will be allowed more than four entries in each class. Every bird must have its individual coop, duly labelled and stored below the staging where the bird is exhibited. No exhibitor will be allowed to take birds from a coop without written order or before 10:30 P. M. Saturday of the week of the show. These are a few new wrinkles that will help the intending exhibitors and the show.

Mr. S. L. Roberts, secretary of the Boston Show, called at the American Fancier office one day last week and reported great progress being made for the coming great exhibition of the Hub. Nearly every available inch of floor space has already been sold and one of the largest and finest displays of incubators, brooders and poultry appliances ever shown in this country is assured. Judges are now being selected and when completed, the list will be a most complete and formidable one. We were pleased to learn that one of the judicial selections was Senator A. F. Peirce of New Hampshire, who is to place the awards on Games and Game Bantams at Boston. This should stir up the Game and Game Bantam fanciers and result in a rousing big entry.

THE WINTER FAIR, GUELPH, DECEMBER 10 TO 14, 1906.

The Provincial Winter Fair, which is held annually at Guelph, Ontario, is, the big event of the year for poultrymen. At the last fair the poultry department was said to contain the largest and best display of poultry, etc., ever seen in Canada, there being over thirty-six hundred entries. The advertising which results from exhibiting at the fair is such that every breeder of pure-bred poultry should make a showing.

Over two thousand dollars are offered in regular cash prizes, and besides these there will be a list of special prizes which will probably have a value of over one thousand dollars. The special list will be issued about November 10th. Before being eligible to compete for special prizes an exhibitor must have made a contribution which should be sent to the secretary before the 15th of October.

The regular prize list is now ready for distribution. In the poultry department the following classes have been added: Rhode Island Reds, Birchen Games, Birchen Game Bantams, Peruvian, Abyssinian and Smooth Coated Cavies, Orpington Cockerels and pullets in dressed poultry, and squabs.

Persons wishing prize lists, entry forms or other information should write to A. P. Westervelt, Secretary, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Canada.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

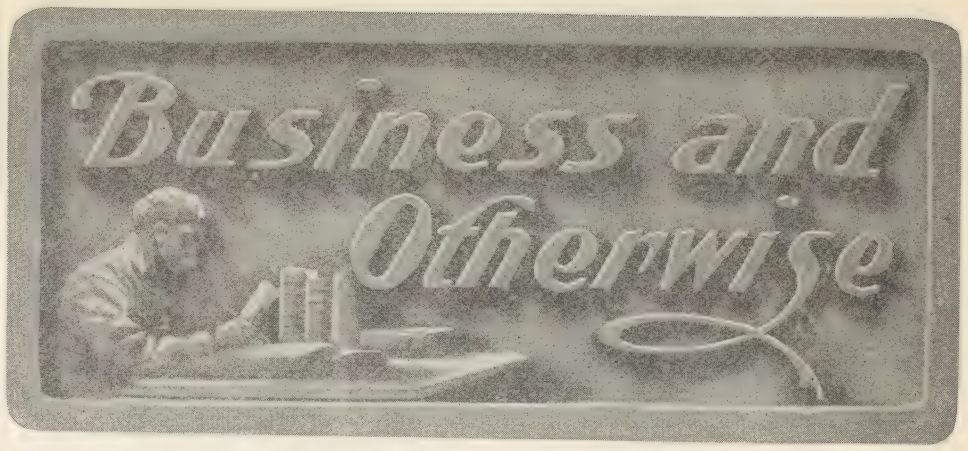
The Springfield Fanciers' club with 19 charter members was the result of a quiet meeting last night in Graves' hall of some of the poultry enthusiasts of this city, and several of the neighboring cities and towns. The organization is solely for the purpose of forwarding the interests of the poultry fanciers as a whole in this immediate section, and is composed of men who have felt that the Springfield Poultry and Pet Stock association, which became practically defunct last May, should have a successor. Incidentally the new organization means to lay its plans along somewhat more conservative lines, and to remedy in large measure some of the evils that existed in the old association and were the cause of its final decease.

The newly formed club proceeded directly to the election of officers last night after its formation, and also voted to hold a scorecard show from Dec. 12 to Dec. 15. The officers who were elected are as follows: President, E. C. Powell of Longmeadow; secretary, W. R. Graves of this city; treasurer, W. D. Downs of this city; recording secretary, E. C. Phillips of Agawam; vice presidents, Herbert H. Graves of this city, E. L. Smith of West Springfield, and H. B. Waite of West Springfield. The executive committee is composed of the following members: R. E. Cooper of Westfield, F. J. Sheldon of Enfield,Conn., Thomas Ray of Holyoke, E. A. Howe of Brightwood, H. J. Fiske of Longmeadow and J. R. Jones of Suffield. E. C. Powell, H. H. Graves and W. R. Graves were appointed a committee to draw up a constitution and by-laws.

The membership fee has been placed at $2 and the regular annual dues will be $1. A $5 guarantee will be required of each member to be invested in a sinking fund. The club voted to hold its meetings bi-weekly, and the next meeting will be held in Graves' hall, Oct. 5.

The old association, which was incorporated in 1903, ran three shows. The first two were recognized successes and besides paying all expenses, netted a considerable little sum for the treasury. The show which was held last December was the primal cause for the dissolution of the association. There was no little criticism on the part of some of the members of the old association at the way the last show was run, but at the regular annual meeting in February the members who had been somewhat strong in their criticism chose to hold themselves aloof from the election rather than press their side of the question. After the annual election interest seemed to rapidly fall off and the attendance at the regular monthly meetings dwindled down, until at the May meeting a quorum failed to put in an appearance. Since that time there have been no meetings of the association and there seems to have been no attempt to arouse any enthusiasm.

By limiting the membership of the club somewhat, the present organization hopes to be able to work together a little better for the common good of its members. The present officers of the Fanciers' club are confident that a poultry show can be made a paying institution and the same men will take charge of the show next December who had charge of the first two shows of the old association. There will be several changes made in the management of the show which will prevent any such criticism as was made on the last show.



EAGERLY LOOKED FOR.

Editor American Fancier:

Your accounts of the races from the different districts are improving. If you keep it up, The American Fancier will be as eagerly looked for during the racing season as it is during the fall and winter show season.

CHANGE OF PUBLICATION OFFICE

Beginning with this issue, the publication office of the American Fancier will be located at Johnstown, New York. The editorial office will remain at the old stand, Havemeyer Building, New York city. The rapid growth of the American Fancier and the increasing number of show reports as well as news items demand the most up-to-date facilities in printing and mailing of a weekly paper. This has been secured in the home of its birth and the same printers who successfully performed the work for a number of years prior to the removal of the paper to Washington, will again be in charge. With six Mergenthaler typesetting machines, a fine array of up-to-date presses and type, a force of experienced men to do the work, the mechanical end will be in safe and trusty hands. It is further contemplated to make a specialty of fine printing for poultry fanciers; premium lists and catalogs will be special features of this line. A new series of modern cuts will be provided for our patrons. The prices will be the lowest consistent with first-class workmanship. The mailing of the American Fancier will be conducted with the same dispatch and thoroughness that characterized our Johnstown office years ago. Subscribers and advertisers will receive their papers the same week as issued in the future. Copy for advertisements will in the future be received up till twelve o'clock noon Tuesday of each week, instead of Monday, as has been the rule in the past. Subscribers and advertisers are always welcome at either of our offices and are invited to make the latter their headquarters when in town.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.

We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

The strictly fresh, from nest to table egg, is worth in the open market to-day, three cents a dozen more than last season. The hen business is surely riding on the tidal wave of prosperity.

There is no more pleasing task to the poultry keeping fraternity than to gather a full basket of clean, large and attractive eggs, not only a source of gratification, but a profitable one as well.

Eggs now being laid by hens are full sized, which adds to their attractiveness.

Were it possible to obtain mature pullets in quantity, ready to lay now and take the place of the hens in the moult, the fall egg question would be pretty near a solution. Many March hatched Leghorns are laying a mean little egg, unfit for market. For this reason I would not call them exactly the ideal fall and early winter layer.

The middle classes, aptly so named, start in with an egg near eight to the pound on an average, and when hatched prior to February 15th, should be matured and in full lay by Sept. 15th, in time to take up the duties cast off by the old flock.

Why would it not be well to have the chicks hatched and started in the south,and moved north when the warm days of spring come? Here is an idea for the enterprising, free of charge.

With a flock of well matured pullets to work with, I should fit up winter quarters for them and handle in the same way, nutritious food, plenty of attention and lots of work for a diversion.

They might stand aloof for a week or so, but eventually they would be bound to get down to business and give a good account of themselves under such treatment.

The object of confinement would be to prevent a division of the good things.

Just now the fanciers' yards contain half grown young stock, others nearer maturity, moulting fowls, laying hens, and a motley crowd of cockerels.

Under the circumstances it is impossible to give any one kind or class especial attention.

With liberal feeding the laying hen will look out for herself, but the pullets need coaxing, for this reason, the opportunity being available, I should yard them for mine.

Here is an egg story for you: "A pair of ducks were used to supply eggs for the breakfast table of a family of three. They proved so prolific, duck eggs began to disgust the palates of the consumers, till finally they became ashamed to look a duck egg square in the face and allowed them to accumulate in the pantry until some dozens were stored there." Shades of Mt. Olympus, what laying! Funny a fellow could not get hold of a bonanza like that 'round Easter time.

An isolation hospital with a receptacle for medicine attached is a handy thing on a poultry farm.

Many a good bird would be treated more promptly and probably cured quickly of some minor ailment, if a convenient quarter was at hand.

Mine has but one drawback, it is up three stories. Once there, however, it is light, dry and cheerful.

A writer in Tribune Farmer says, "Should a breeder's flock go to pieces in May it is the result of cramped quarters or bad method of handling the stock.

Naturally, eggs should give a better account of themselves in May than earlier in the season; if not, don't condemn the breed, but look for the cause. Good advice.

WHY I BREED BLACK MINORCAS.

I have been taking poultry journals for the last four or five years, and at the present time, am taking five of them. During all that time, I do not remember seeing one single article on the Black Minorca. Truly the Minorca breeders must be a very modest lot. Probably they are like the farmer I once heard of who was endeavoring to sell a yoke of oxen to a neighbor. The farmer was continually praising the good qualities of the nigh ox, but said nothing about the off ox. At length the neighbor asked him why he was praising the nigh ox so much, and said nothing about the off one. The answer he got was that the off ox was so good that he did not need praising.

I have been breeding fowl for the last twenty years, although I have seldom exhibited, and have bred nearly all the general purpose varieties, and can truthfully say that I consider the Black Minorca the best in the list, both for the farmer and fancier. I do not believe there is a breed of fowl in existence that will lay more eggs in a year than the Minorca, laying equally well both winter and summer if properly housed. I frequently have pullets laying in September and October, and seldom have any pullets that are not laying by January. My Minorcas are laying at present, almost as well as they did in April and May. When you consider the size of the Minorca eggs, as they frequently weigh two pounds to the dozen, they certainly have all other breeds distanced as egg producers.

With a great many of the heavier birds, I have always had trouble in getting them too fat for laying and breeding. Not so with the Minorcas, for they invariably turn the extra feed into eggs. They do not sit or stand around waiting for meal time, but are great hustlers, if given free range.

I have often heard it said that the Minorca is not a good table fowl. Such is not the case, as anyone will testify who has the good luck to have had a dinner with Minorca on its menu. Their meat is very juicy and tender, and of extra fine flavor, and has not that coarse texture of flesh that some fowl have. The only point I know of that can be made against the Minorca is the color of their skin, which is a little dark.

Minorcas are the largest of the Mediterranean classes, and the standard weight for cock and cockerel is only ½ pound less than for Rocks, and for hen and pullet the Standard calls for the same weights. The Black Minorca is also a beautiful bird, and as the New Standard says, the lines of breast and body are well rounded and the general bearing is graceful, aggressive and commanding. Another erroneous idea that some have, is that Minorca chicks are hard to raise. If properly fed, they are as easy if not easier than the chicks of most other breeds to raise. I have over 300 chicks this season out of not more than 330, hatched.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 8,187 cases. The market is firm and active on fresh collections, but there were no advances made in prices. The supply of new laid does not increase in proportion to the demand, and sellers are in position to demand extreme prices for a quality suitable for high-class trade. Commencing on Wednesday a change in the rules goes into effect, whereby sellers can offer under the call fresh eggs in 25-case lots, instead of 50 cases, as the rules now require. This change has resulted from the actual scarcity of fresh eggs, and inability of sellers to do much public trading. The position of storage eggs was entirely unchanged. Aprils were held at 23c. Limed eggs are selling in a small way at 21½@22c. Call sales were 100 cases western firsts f. g., buyers' options, seven days after Wednesday at 27c.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 923 pkgs. Trade was hampered yesterday by delays in the delivery of fresh stock. From advices it is not believed that shipments for the remainder of the week will be heavy. The offerings of fowls were fully as small as they were last week, and the tone was very firm, but prices are no higher. There was decided improvements in the position of chickens, and higher prices were established on western, dry-picked and scalded of average quality. Turkeys were quiet. Ducks were fairly active. Squabs sold slowly.

THE GREAT ALLENTOWN FAIR.

The fifty-fifth Annual Fair of the Lehigh County Agricultural Society has passed into history. Much has been said and written that has been doubted, but the half has never been told. To me it was a revelation of all those things that go to make up a great and grand exhibition of things interesting to not only the farmer but the city sport as well. And the crowds of people, you never saw the like. A jam and jostle from morning till night, with no drunkenness and every one in a good humor. The receipts for the week were $51,075.88 and the year will show a net profit of fully $25,000. Not only did the Association make money, but the fakir coined it and the great animal show of Feraira was crowded and he went away happy with well filled coffers. To dwell on the speed programme and the exhibits fully would be impossible, but when an Association puts up a purse of $5,000 for a trial heat by Dan Patch, the fastest harness horse in the world, and $5,000 for a trial heat by Cresceus, the fastest trotting stallion in the world, together with hundreds of other attractions for twenty-five cents admission and clears the above named sum, you can have some idea of the proficiency of the management. It is not my purpose to dwell on all the departments, for I would not be capable. It was my pleasure to be one of the judges on Poultry, and it is with the greatest of pleasure that I write regarding it. The only bad thing was the intense heat and we fulfilled the scriptures to the letter by earning our bread by the sweat of our brow, but in this instance we earned somewhat more than bread. They have two large poultry buildings, the one model, equipped with Empire coops, cement floor with iron railings forming an aisle for the judges and as perfect in all its appointments as is possible to make it. The other just the opposite, but with the promise of a new one for next year. The show was classified and fully up to any of the winter shows in quality. 2,800 in the poultry classes and more than 1,000 in the pigeon classes. To pick out the birds of more than usual merit and comment on them would take up too much of your valuable space. Not a class that did not contain winning birds fit to grace any of the large winter shows and win the blue. To me it is a source of the greatest pleasure to note the marked improvement in the quality of the birds shown at the Fairs. A few years ago the quality was so poor that almost anything seemed fit to be shown there, but now it takes as good birds to win as at the winter shows. Too much praise cannot be given the genial and gentlemanly Superintendent, W. Theodore Wittman, and his able assistant, J. W. Bruckart. Everything possible to do was done for the comfort and pleasure of the exhibitors and the prevailing expression was we will be back next year. Following is a full list of the exhibitors.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

By B. J. Hill, Associate Editor.

Mr. Henry Young, Superintendent of the Youngstown Show, is busily engaged in completing his poultry plant just on the outskirts of that city. He has well under way a new house, 240x16. Mr. Young is breeding S. C. Brown Leghorns, Black Minorcas, Black Langshans, and Silver Wyandottes. At Youngstown, last year, he won a cup on a pen of Brown Leghorns and Silver Trophy for the three highest-scoring pens.

At Beaver, Pa., we found Mr. Fred Cook, the Brown Leghorn specialist, ready to talk chicken. We had the pleasure of inspecting Mr. Cook's new poultry plant, and it is certainly a beauty. Mr. Cook, being a lumber dealer and contractor, as well as a poultryman of experience, has all the advantages such a combination gives when it comes to providing quarters for his hobby. The flock has not been culled and it would be hard to decide where to begin, as they have wonderful shape and color and remarkable freedom from shafting. Mr. Cook shows quite extensively, and at the Cincinnati Show, last year, took all the cream.

Mrs. Harvey H. Miller, of Canton, Ohio, is the lady that caused consternation in the Barred Rock Alley at Cleveland, Ohio, last season, and at this time, her birds look as if the same thing would happen again this year. Mrs. Miller believes in concentrating every effort toward one object and therefore confines herself to pullet breeding exclusively. I did not think it possible that there were so many good Barred Rock pullets in one flock in the whole of the Central States. The flocks had not been culled, but there was not a smutty-backed bird in the bunch, and some of the individual birds were the best I have seen for a long time. Mrs. Miller is beautifully situated on the trolley just outside of Canton and with the orchards on the farm has every advantage to make good stock develop right.

Mr. L. D. Blanchard, of Canton, Ohio, who for years has been an enthusiastic breeder of all varieties of pheasants, feels compelled, in consequence of business interests, to give up the fancy. His collection is very fine, and it seems a shame to break it up.

Mr. John Yant, Canton, Ohio, who for years has been well-known as a breeder of good Barred Rocks, succeeded this year in raising a lot of good birds. He has bred his strain in line for years, and has had a very successful career as a showman.

A new departure in the method of preserving eggs.—Mr. H. C. Ferguson of Canton, Ohio, has been granted patent on a storage cask for preserving eggs. He has made tests extending back to May, 1902, convincing capitalists as to the success of the method. The Vacuum Storage Cask Company has been formed with a capital stock of $10,000.00, fully paid in, and this firm is now getting their machinery ready to manufacture the Vacuum Cask to be placed on the market in the spring. The American Fancier will later give its readers a full description of this method. Simply stated, the idea is to exhaust the air in the vessel after packing the eggs.

Wheeling W. Va.—It is too bad that the State Fair Grounds at Wheeling, W. Va., are not larger by at least twenty-five acres. This year the grounds were simply packed. The exhibits in every department were good, and the poultry exhibits were larger and of better quality than ever before. The most notable exhibit was that of the Quillhurst Poultry Yards, Elyria, Ohio, who won 67 firsts and 43 seconds. This firm is breeding some of the best in Games and Bantams, and Waterfowl. T. L. Lodge, Bannock, Ohio, showed a fine string of white birds in Orpingtons, Rocks, and Wyandottes. J. E. Graham, of Key, Ohio, made an exhibit in S. C. White Leghorns, that in shape and color, were a wonder. He showed one cockerel that is absolutely the best, both in shape and color, that I have seen for years. We were unable to get the complete list of awards before leaving Wheeling. The success of this department is due to the efforts of Mr. J. D. Rice, East Liverpool, Ohio, who is one of the best of superintendents.

T. M. Harkness, Ashland, Ohio, breeder of S. C. Black Minorcas, showed the writer as nice a bunch of this variety as you often see. Mr. Harkness has always been strong in comb and lobes, and this year has succeeded in getting tails down where they belong. He has a freak in a pullet that is green, not greenish-black, but green fluff, under-color and all.

Mr. W. A. Mason, long well-known in Ohio and surrounding states as a successful Barred Rock breeder, has just bought a farm on the outskirts of Ashland, and now has all the advantages of unlimited range. He will continue to keep some pens on his town plant. He has considerable stock up to his usual standard, if not better.

C. W. Rollins, the old-time Buff Rock breeder, of Ashland, Ohio, is tickled all over with his success this season. He has always been able to breed winners, but this year he has beaten himself, especially in color.

It is not generally known that willow trees will grow upside-down. Mr. T. S. Campbell, of Mansfield, set some posts a year or two ago, made of fresh willows, about six inches in diameter. He sawed them square at each end, and set them up-end down. They grew, and to-day are fair size, shade-giving trees.

B. M. Allison, Akron, Ohio, is equipping his tile factory with a poultry grit department for the manufacture of this necessary article from stone-ware. As the rare material is without limit in Akron, he will be able to turn out several cars a day.

WESTERN ONTARIO POULTRY ASSOCIATION.

The Board of Directors of the Western Ontario Poultry Association met in the farmers' institute tent exhibition grounds, Toronto, on Tuesday, September 4th. A full board with the exception of one was present.

The principal business to be attended to was the selection of judges for the winter show at Guelph. Long discussions took place on who was to have such and such classes, but it finally resulted in the classes being placed as follows:

Sharp Butterfield—Games, Game Bantams and Ornamental bantams. Richard Oke—Orpingtons and all the Asiatics with the one exception of Partridge Cochine. L. G. Jarvis—Dorkings, Polands, Ducks and Geese. Smelt—Spanish, Minorcas, Javas, Hamburgs, Andalusians, Red Caps, Houdan, Creve Cours, La Fleche, Sultans, Silkies and A. O. V. fowls. J. H. Drevenstedt—All Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and Dominique. Mr. Anderson—Turkey. Geo. Burgott—All Leghorns. Jos. Bennett—All Plymouth Rocks. Wm. Barber—Rabbits, Pheasants, Guinea Pigs, etc. Mr. Currier—All Fantail and Jacobin Pigeons. Mr. Wagner—All varieties of Pigeons. Messrs. W. R. Graham and Wm. Barber will judge all utility classes.

The selling classes will be judged by some judges as corresponding exhibition classes.

The resolution that was made at the annual meeting last winter regarding the special prize question, was adopted and on October 15th the special prize list will close.

On motion it was decided that all business in future be done at the annual meeting at Guelph and that the directors be paid the expenses.

After a number of valuable prizes had been subscribed to the special prize fund from the various clubs the meeting adjourned.

THE BROWN LEGHORN FEMALE ON THE ROAD TO PERFECTION.

With much interest, I have noted the rapid advance of the fancy or standardbred Brown Leghorn female. I believe that the best of to-day are fully two points nearer perfection (notwithstanding the slight changes in the late Standard) than the best were three years ago.

Taking the New York Madison Square Show as a representative of the best, I think the difference is more than three points between those of two years previous, and the splendid display at the late shows. I may add, that there is no other one show that comes as near showing all of the best, as does the Madison Square Garden Show. I well remember the good qualities and defects of the winning females at the Garden in 1904. These birds were quite even in color of wing and back and very finely penciled (or strippled, as the New Standard terms it). To be sure, they were quite free from brick color and shafting, and had a smooth, silky finish. The shade of color was a very light brown, tinged with grey, the latter effect being produced by the lighter edging of the feathers. Some breeders termed this light edging a washed-out appearance.

Aside from the light-brown, soft, silky effect (which was truly desirable) these birds were greatly defective. In hackle they were extremely weak; breast, only fair; legs, poor, being whitish and blackish, instead of yellow. In general shape of body and head points, they were not better than fair. In color of tail, body and fluff, as well as size of body, they were probably fully equal to the best of to-day.

Their one desirable quality was that even, soft, light shade of brown on wing and back, which truly constituted the most conspicuous part, if not the greater portion of the bird.

I think it very probable that if these birds had been shown under the score-card, and scored according to the Standard scale of points, that many times they would not have won the blue. But as a matter of fact, everybody admired that color, and it seemd as though every fancier of the Brown Leghorn was breeding Wittman stock, either in part or whole. Undoubtedly it is those that were breeding it in part, that have the goods to-day.

I for one introduced a Wittman male into my flock with good results. I improved on the hackles and leg color, as well as the back and wing color, producing a deeper, richer shade of brown, without the greyish tinge.

At the late New York show, the Wittman stock was somewhat in the shade, winning but one or two of the lesser prizes, and I think it deserved no more. But there is good breeding in this stock to-day, if properly mated with certain other stock to be found in our land.

The up-to-date Brown Leghorn female of to-day must be pretty close to absolutely free from shafting and brick color, have a well-striped hackle, a clear, salmon breast, yellow legs, and medium size comb. Besides all this, she must be well-shaped. In fact, she must be somewhere near what the Standard prescribes.

To be sure, the Brown Leghorn female has advanced in a fancy way, by strides and bounds. It is surely a pleasure to fanciers of the breed to think of this. I predict that before many years have elapsed, the Brown Leghorn will be carrying off sweepstake prizes, in spite of all the difficulty in producing her par excellence.

Now, Brethren, be awake. There is plenty of chance for improvement. Study your birds, determine what you need for improvement, and if you haven't it, get it. There's a great variety to be found. Don't balk at a price, if you are sure it's what you want. There are going to be some prices paid for Brown Leghorns some day; and if you have the goods, the prices are yours. If any variety of fowls has made as much progress as the Brown Leghorn, I am not aware of it.

WEED'S WANDERINGS.

Hartford, Capital City of the Nutmeg State. If you visit this city be sure to give Mr. F. Groesbeck a call at his place of business. You will find Fred a very busy man, sitting very conveniently near the 'phone. He is talking dog one minute, and switches off on chicken or rabbit the next, with an ease that is wonderful.

From Fred's we take a Blue Hills car for the home of R. C. Tuttle. Did you ever see a bang-up good lot of Reds? If not, I have enjoyed one pleasure that you have not, for Mr. Tuttle certainly has a grand lot of youngsters, with that fine rich red that by no stretch of imagination can be mistaken for buff—a grand lot, and sure to be heard from this winter.

Our next visit is to the home of S. J. McQuilliande. "Sam" is a very busy man these days, and but for the able help of Mrs. McQuilliande would certainly get snowed under. Mrs. Sam had just gotten back from Toronto, where the birds must have created a very favorable impression, judging from the many letters received. Mrs. McQuilliande has only words of praise for the courtesy and kind usage she received from the Canadian Fanciers. Two days after this, we can see what their stock did at the Simsbury Fair. Four birds were shown, four firsts were won. By the way, the Simsbury Fair was a real surprise to me, for in dogs and chickens they had quality hard to be beaten.

In poultry, besides Crangle, Chatman, and others, Mrs. A. Dodge had some fine White Orpingtons and White Wyandottes.

While this is not a dog paper, I must speak of the exhibit here. Oh, if you could have seen the pleased features of J. Lewis, when given the gold piece for the best dog in the show, and Dr. Knox, when winning the cup for the best hound in the show, with a dog that was so homely that he was really handsome. By the way, the Doctor has this to say about the Runner Ducks: 'He says, "they will lay more eggs than anything that wears feathers," and for the table "they cannot be beaten."

The Simsbury Fair is proof of what a few determined men can do for a neighborhood.

Mr. J. B. Thomas, with his able manager, were certainly the life of the Fair. The "Genial Fred" seemed ubiquitous in his endeavors to have everyone enjoy themselves. I predict for the Simsbury Fair a great future.

GEORGE W. WEED.

The Inter-State Fair held at Trenton, N. J., with the liberal premium money and classification offered in the pigeon department should have been better supported by the pigeon fanciers. We cannot understand why so many breeders of high-class stock were among the "stay at homes." We know of no reason other than their birds were not in the proper condition at so early a date, and hope this is the cause, as Trenton offered the classification, premium money and list of judges of an up-to-date winter exhibition.

The White Fantail, winner of 1st and cup Dairy, 1st and Diamond Jubilee cup at the recent Palace Show, imported by Mr. George E. Rowland, is dead. This is the bird that has caused quite a controversy in English Fantail circles regarding the sex. It was shown by Mr. Stevenson and won as a hen, but the award was protested afterward on the ground that it was entered in the wrong class. Strange to relate, up to the time of its death neither Mr. Rowland nor other fanciers who had seen the bird were sure of its sex. The British Fantail Club had written Mr. Rowland, requesting that he advise them the true sex of the bird, and left all matters stand until they received a favorable reply. We anxiously await the action the above club will take on learning of the death of this great winner.

Although Mr. George Rowland has lost a most valuable bird in the Jubilee winner, it will in no way affect his string of white cocks for the coming winter shows. His lofts to-day shelter the best collection of Crystal Palace whites ever owned by an American Fancier, and should make things lively for the "boys" a little later.

There is some talk of another show in Washington, D. C. It seems strange with all the dyed-in-the-wool pigeon fanciers in and around the Capitol they cannot get together and have a show. They have the fanciers and the birds, so what is the cause of no Washington show for the past five years?

The American Pigeon Club set of resolutions made at the first annual meeting, Madison Square Garden, January, 1904, have been mailed to all members by Secretary E. C. Duffy, to be voted upon and returned before October beneficial to the welfare of the club 20th, 1906. These resolutions are and should be carried. We are anxious to see the A. P. C. vested with the same power as the English Pigeon Club and managed on the same basis, which has proven a success

From reports gleaned from the Jacobin fanciers, most all have had a successful season. We know of no variety in better hands than the Jacobin. The improvement during the past few years has been wonderful. This improvement has been due to proper importation. Many of the best specimens have found their way to America, specimens which cost many pounds to import. With such blood in the country it is easy to account for the improvement.

The Homer fanciers are complaining about the loss in flying, especially the young birds. There is no doubt a large majority of flyers are caught by the different squab plants throughout the country, not intentionally, but the birds, probably tired and hungry, stop for feed and water, and finding the place attractive decide to change their place of residence.

Should it come to the notice of either owner or manager, they should try and find the proper owner. This can be done by dropping a postal to the secretary or some paper devoted to the fancy.

THE INTER-STATE FAIR AT TRENTON.

The Pigeon display at Trenton Inter-State Fair, although small, contained some really first class specimens. Muffed Tumblers filled well and the quality throughout was indeed first class. Gerald W. Hopkins showing a fine team. His Red Self cock can stand the best of competition. He has grand color, nice shaped and beautifully muffed. The young white Self of the Llewellyn Squab Farm is another really good muffed Tumbler, and should develop into a good one. English and African Owls classes had birds of fair quality.

The Flying Homer classes were well filled, average about eight to the class. Among the winners, the blue cock owned by Fort & Wentzien is worthy a mention. Beautiful sofe color, grand station, excellent head, a really first class homer, wins easily.

Mr. I. S. Miller showed a fine team in very good condition. His 1st Blue Checker cock is another just full of quality, the right type. The White classes contained a corking lot, the second old white hen we considered one of the best we have yet seen and should have won, although all owned by the same party, Edwin C. Snyder, and much of the same type.

The Maltese Hen Pigeon in the young cock class shown by Foot & Wentzein was one of the best of this odd variety yet seen, and is certainly a credit to its owner, although there are very few of these birds at the shows. They are being improved upon each year, and before long we shall see this variety turn up in goodly numbers at our shows.

300-MILE CONCOURSE FLY.

The annual 300-mile young-bird race of the Western New York Concourse Race Association was flown from the various liberating points last Sunday, September 16th, fanciers from the cities of Rochester, Jamestown and Buffalo competing, 440 birds of this year's breeding starting. The Rochester birds were liberated at Riverton, Va., at 7:02 a. m.; Jamestown's at Reesville, O., at 7 a. m. and Buffalo's at Athens, O., at 7 a. m., eastern standard time. Buffalo birds were favored with a slight southwest wind, Jamestown's had a west one and Rochester had to face an east wind, and the result was a very hard and slow race. The piercing hot sun was too much for a great many of these game little youngsters, only 64 out of the entire entry homing on day of toss, and all of them to Buffalo fanciers. Birds wearing the letter E band of this year's issue are the only ones eligible to compete in this race and the time limit is day of toss. The birds competed for four handsome hand-engraved diplomas, viz.: first, second, third one for the loft reporting the largest percentage home the same day. This race also decides the various district races, for which the National Federation of American Homing Pigeon Fanciers issues first, second and third diplomas, one special blue ribbon diploma for nominated birds and one for the best general average speed for the series of four young-bird races.

The Jamestown and Rochester fanciers were, of course, disappointed not to win this notable event, but will try again and the Buffalo boys wish them success the next time.

A. Schusterbauer won first concourse diploma by timing in the first bird at 4:04:40 p. m., with J. F. Weinert a very close second at 4:05:01 p. m., and R. Trapp a dangerous third at 4:05:41. This race practically closes the racing season for 1906. It, no doubt, will long be remembered as one of the most disastrous of fanciers in this part of the country have experienced in many years. The following table shows the first arrival to each loft, the first three being concourse diploma winners:

Name and District.	Speed in yds. per minute.
A. Schusterbauer, Cold Spring	959.31
J. Weinert, Quene City	956.34
F. Trapp, Central	955.52
J. Doll, West Side	946.55
L. Viedt, West Side	927.78
J. Kraetz & Son	926.16
H. Hankin, Queen City	922.81
Knox & Betts, West Side	919.94
V. A. Kamiensky, Empire	919.89
W. Eberhardt, Cold Spring	919.66
W. Gerlach, Buffalo	918.45
Fellows & Walker, West Side	917.64
K. Wendt, Central	914.56
T. R. Barr, Empire	913.29
N. Schneider, Buffalo	910.12
J. Noeller, Central	906.21
J. Staub, Queen City	905.94
E. Soergel, Cold Spring	904.97
E. Roetting, Queen City	901.38
L. Reu, Empire	899.55
H. Fischer, Cold Spring	896.74
C. Tingler, Empire	896.06
D. Weissenberger, East Side	895.75
W. Fritz, Buffalo	894.78
G. Beltz, Frontier	890.45
F. Warren, Queen City	889.94
C. Loedel, Frontier	886.03
Mathies & Strasser Bros., Frontier	877.39
L. J. Kengott, Empire	871.76
A. Hehnen, Cold Spring	850.53
J. Male, Empire	845.88
E. Becker, East Side	835.63
F. Volk, Queen City	757.58

The average percentage diploma concourse honors was won by J. Kraety & Sons of Central district, having 33 per cent. home.

The general district averages were won as follows:

	Yards.
Buffalo district (N. Schneider).	937.27
Frontier district (Machels & Strasser Bros.)	1,037.54
West Side district (Knox & Betts)	935.68
East Side district (E. Becker)	998.22
Cold Spring district (A. Schusterbauer)	921.44
Central district (R. Trapp)	991.31
Queen City district (J. Weinert)	939.99
Empire district (Victor A. Kaminsky)	938.84

Special blue-ribbon diplomas for nominated birds: Buffalo district, E. M. Fritz, 40 per cent.; Frontier district, G. Beltz, 12½ per cent.; West Side district, Fellows & Walker, 33 1-3 per cent.; East Side district, E. Becker, 11 1-9 per cent.; Cold Spring district, H. Fisher, 33 1-3 per cent.; Central district, J.Kraety & Sons, 33 1-3 per cent.; Queen City district, H. Hankin, 20½ per cent.; Empire district, Christ Tingler, 33 1-3 per cent.

Total lofts competing, 64, our of which 26 had no reports. The fanciers will now begin to select their birds for the 500-mile concourse race next June.

Editor American Fancier:

Our district tried again this season to make the 500 mile station with young birds, but were unable to get returns in time limit. The reasons are so clearly set forth, in a letter from the Liberator, that I am sending you a copy of same for publication, if you choose, as I think it will prove interesting reading and perhaps cause a smile from among some of your readers. At the same time it is no reflection on our birds that were entered in this particular race, for they were our best. Yours truly,

JOHN F. KNOX, Race Sec'y.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1906.

ESTABLISHING A STRAIN.

By Philip Montgomery.

As each winter comes around and we go to the Pigeon shows we can see at once that there has been a noticeable improvement in the general quality of the exhibits. Whether the Poultry has improved at the pace the Pigeons have would be hard to decide. The popular varieties of Pigeons have been bred for many more years than many of the popular varieties of Poultry, and as the specimens are near perfection, it is harder to improve them.

In starting out as a fancier of first class stock, we have to buy of someone who has such stock for sale. Probably it is not possible to purchase the best he has, so we are behind him in the race if we consider the individual specimens. If we have purchased relatives of the best birds we are equal as far as blood goes and we must at once at work to use this blood that we may get an improved quality in the young. No matter how good birds we may buy to start with, there will be marked differences between them, and we must so mate and breed these bought birds that their offspring will tend to become a composite of the best qualities of the old birds. All of the varieties that we know now have been produced by the union of different varieties, and therefore each individual bird has in his or her veins the blood of very different ancestors. Without proper direction the strongest of these descended qualities will assume control and gradually the new birds would return to resemble some ancestor totally different perhaps from the present variety.

The fundamental point in creating a strain, is to thoroughly understand the ideal type and then to systematically work the types you have in an ever-approaching degree toward that ideal. To do this we must know exactly the relation of each bird in the loft and the characteristics of each ancestor of each bird. In establishing a strain of Pigeons we will assume that we have bought from some first class breeder two pairs of birds as good and as nearly approaching our ideal type as we can afford to buy. As the breeder from whom we buy is the best judge of the birds, we will mate them as he directs, and breed them that way the first year.

From the young of each pair we will select the best cock and hen, and cross the youngsters, and at the end of the second year we will have to again select the best ones. These last we notice will all be grandchildren to the original birds.

At the end of the second year our entire stock will not have been inbred at all and we are in no danger of doing any damage by reason of mating too closely related birds for the third year.

If the desired ideal has been kept in mind in selecting the best youngsters each year we should find that the general type of the grandchildren shows an improvement over any one of the original birds.

Beginning the third year we have either to take up the question of in-breeding or to again purchase stock for unrelated crosses, and it is to the scientific process of in-breeding that we must depend if we are to get the bes tresults. Thus far we have been breeding to bring about a balance of the good points into a uniform type and we must now begin to perfect that type by breeding in such a way that we will have in some birds certain points so strongly developed that that point will overcome the lack of the same point in the bird to which it is mated.

To clearly explain this let us study a case. You have a pair, the cock of which is strong in color but weak in shape, mated to a hen fair in color but fine in shape. From the young from this pair we will select the very best shaped hen and mate it to the father. The young hen has in it the good color of its father even if it does not appear, and by mating back to its father we multiply the potency of blood influencing the color.

By resorting to such in-breeding we will gradually work up a loft of birds of the same general type, and continually approach our ideal. Of course we must resort to outside crosses for new blood, but by never using a raw cross throughout the loft we will not lose the type on which we are building. As a beginner might go too far in in-breeding it is well to state a few in-bred crosses that will not result in weakening the offspring, viz: Cousin to cousin; cousin or uncle to aunt; grandparent to grandchild; or parent to offspring. These crosses are perfectly safe if the grandparents are unrelated. Of course it may be to advantage to breed much closer than this in the attempt to get an exhibition bird, but for breeding stock it would be unsafe to go any further except in the attempt to reduce the size of the birds.—Philip Montgomery, in Pigeon and Poultry.

YOUNG BIRDS FLEW 300-MILE RACE.

The West Side District National Federation American Homing Pigeon Fanciers flew their 300-mile young bird race from Athens, Ohio, on Sept. 16, in connection with the Western New York Concourse Association. The birds were liberated by Official Liberator R. L. Woodworth, who wired: "Birds liberated 6 o'clock, central standard time; weather fair, slight southwest wind.

The first bird arrived at the loft of Julius G. Doll at 4:10 and proved to be the first bird in the district, also fourth in the concourse race—owing to the winning of this popular loft, in one of the hardest races of the season, it is rumored that something out of the ordinary is to take place at the headquarters of the West Side District.

The result of the race decides the winners of the two special diplomas as follows:

Knox & Betts—For best average speed in young bird races, from the 100, 150, 200 and 300-mile stations, with an average of 967.11 yards per mile.

Fellows & Walker—For best average returns in the 300-mile race for nominated birds being 33 1-3 per cent.

The following shows the positions in the race, the first two birds being diploma winners:

	Yards per min.
Julius G. Doll	946.32
Louis Viedt	929.75
Knox & Betts	919.94
Louis Viedt	917.78
Fellows & Walker	917.64
Fellows & Walker	906.37
Knox & Betts	871.24

THE CAUSE OF MANY LOST HOMERS.

Editor American Fancier:

It is hoped that every fancier will do all they can to bring about some plan to show the owners of squab plants the wrong they are doing by trapping birds that come to their fly coops from hard races. There is no doubt many a good bird falls in the hands of these plants, hunting for something to eat. If these birds were fed and watered by these gentlemen, and released, some of these same birds would no doubt prove diploma winners before the season was over. Any fancier or club would be willing to furnish three birds for the one cared for and liberated. Let the owners of squab plants feed, water and liberate, and then write the secretary, number of bird and when at his place I am sure they will make more out of it in the long run. If these squab plant owners would properly report all strangers banded, we would have less losses and better races, and they will have more friends and better paid.

PIGEON MATING AND NESTING.

Pigeons are what is called platform builders, that is, they make a flat, slight nest of sticks, straws and bits of dry grass, laid together with as little art or trouble as it is possible to conceive in thinking of a bird's nest. Some pigeons' nests are so flat and slight that it is a marvel the eggs do not fall off or through them. All pigeons lay two eggs with one anamalous exception, the passenger pigeon, which appears to lay but one.

When young pigeons are about six months old, or before they begin to go in pairs, except when associated with the entire flock at feeding times, and when they are resting on the roofs or basking in the sun, they retire apart for the purpose of courtship and pay each other little kind attentions, such as nestling close and mutually tickling the heads of each other. At last comes what is called "billing," which is in fact the kiss of a bird. As soon as this takes place the union is complete. The pair are now united companions, not necessarily for life, though usually so, at least as long as they continue satisfied with each other.

After a short honeymoon of play and frolic they settle down to work. The male finds an eligible tenement. If it is empty and bare he carries to it a few sticks and straws, but if the apartment has already been furnished for him he does not take much further trouble in that line. Here he settles himself and begins complaining with a sort of moaning noise. His appeal is sometimes answered by the lady affording him her presence, sometimes not, in which latter case he does not pine in solitude very long, but goes and searches out his careless helpmeet and with close pursuit and a few sharp pecks if necessary insists upon her attending to her business at home. The hen obeys, occasionally however making or pretending to make some resistance. A day or two after she has signified her acceptance of the new home an egg may be expected to be found there. Over this she stands sentinel till after an intervening day a second egg is laid and incubation really commences, not hotly and energetically at first, as with hens, turkeys and many other birds, but gently and with increasing assiduity. The cock does not leave his lady to bear a solitary burden of matrimonial care. He takes his share, though a minor one, in the task of incubating, and he more than performs his half share of the labor of rearing the young. He feeds the hen while she is setting and gives her drink from his crop. He also takes his turn at sitting on the eggs while the hen leaves its nest for air and exercise, as well as food.

When a hen pigeon has the misfortune of losing her mate she is certainly uncomfortable for a while, but not inconsolable. She does not go pining on in solitude for long, refusing to be comforted. When she finds that her partner is forever gone she resigns herself to her fate and takes up with another, whom, however, she would probably desert were her first love, the original mate, by some fortunate chance to make his reappearance.—E. S. Delamar.

THE REASON WHY!

The West Side District National Federation of American Homing Pigeon Fanciers did not receive birds in time limit from their 500 mile station in the young bird race on September 22, 1906.

By E. M. Rousseau, Official Liberator.

Dear Sir:—

I used best judgment, which turned out not to be good. No fog; some stars shining, Pleiades especially, when liberated. Cloudy in patches, clearing in the East. Waited from 4:05 for light. Opened coop at 4:35. Birds would not leave; sat up in our hands but would not go. Seemed cheerful just too early. Gently forced them out. A few left for the north-east,three together. Some lighted in trees in my yard; four stopped at neighbor's house. These latter we urged off at 5:17. Circled beautifully and departed at 5:21 northeast. Two we urged off from top of High School building at 5:40. They left our sight going nearly north.

A little cloud at 5:30 brought a very, very light shower, not enough to wet a silk handkerchief. I judge at 7:15, commenced to rain gently. Raining now at 8:15.

This was the most unsatisfactory start we ever had. Birds got off singly and in small lots. Birds were kept by my bed window, in a latticed porch, over night.

I wish you would let me know just as early as you can, when first arrives, and then when main lot arrives. The start was too early by 30 minutes. Instructions were plain. It took some longer to get coop open than we thought.

Mr. H. W. Leibly of the Minneapolis district wins the single bird toss in the 100 mile race from three different stations Sunday, Sept. 16th. J. H. Barton of the Minneapolis Joulnal won second place. There will be a warm time in the Kerston loft next Sunday if he does not get a portion of the little $30 which is in the bag in Secretary May's office.

Mr. J. Douglass Harcombe should have been credited with winning 1st, 2nd and 3rd Black Muffed Self Tumbler cock and 1st Black Muffed Tumbler hen at White Plains, instead of those printed in Sept. 29th issue.

WATER FOWL CLUB OF AMERICA.

"Article 11. That the object and purpose of the Club is to improve the culture of Water Fowl, and to protect, by co-operation, the interest of the breeders thereof."

The above needs no comment. Every breeder who wished to see improvements in the way of more sales, better quality at the shows, better classifications, more specials, should be willing to assist. "Our membership contains many of the foremost breeders of the fancy, as well as of the economic classes of this great family The work of the Club has been pre-eminently in practical lines, and a continuance of same we consider our duty. The membership is already active in most of the states and in Canada, and with the promised additions will, we believe, prove a force not to be ignored."

Each state having ten or more members is entitled to extra specials at the leading show of the state. "All prizes offered out of the Club funds shall be open for competition only to birds owned for more than thirty days by members of the Club in good standings."

Don't write unnecessary letters, but send your name, address, etc., with $1.00. As fast as additional printed matter is issued the same will be mailed to you.

Send all names to

S. J. ROSS, Secretary.

DATES CLAIMED.

Under this heading there will appear each week a list of all the shows claiming dates for the coming season. Secretaries of poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in the dates selected as promptly as possible. It is not only a convenience and guide to secretaries of shows that have not selected their dates, but of great interest to readers of The American Fancier, a majority of whom are exhibitors.

The Latest and Best Book on Success With Poultry is

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts. The following are only a few of the hundreds received:

The book 999 Questions and Answers is the best of the kind I ever read. I never saw a book in the same class.—C. L. SMITH, Sec'y Minn. State Poultry Ass'n, Minneapolis, Minn.

The contents of the book takes the place of accumulated files of the various poultry papers and places the information desired in a handy and concise form.—C. G. HINDS, Pres. Amer. White P. Rock Club, Alameda, Cal.

It contains information for all classes and grades of poultry keepers, from judge to novice.—F. O. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

There are so many new things in the book and they are so nicely stated that I have taken pleasure in going through it. The unusual quality of the book is that it is full of information for the beginner and it also contains hundreds of things that will be valuable to those of the greatest experience.—T. F. McGREW, Washington, D. C.

The book surely fills a long felt want. Everyone who owns a fowl should also own this valuable book.—AUG. D. ARNOLD, Dillsburg, Pa.

The book will become a very valuable means of information for both old and new breeders, for which they can well afford to pay the price.—JUDGE I. K. FELCH, Natick, Mass.

It contains much of value to the average poultryman, and should meet with ready sale.—JUDGE W. S. RUSSELL, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It is a remarkable book to be the product of one man and I heartily congratulate you upon its production.—JAS. SHACKLETON, Milburn, N. J.

Best of all, it is thoroughly practical. I wish it could be placed in the hands of every poultry keeper in the country. If I could not get another copy I would not take $5 for mine.—EDGAR A. WARREN, author of "200 eggs per hen per year and how to get them," Hampton, N. H.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full. The book is for

POULTRY EXPERIMENTS

By G. M. GOWELL.

[Bulletin of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station, 1906.]

[The Poultry work of the Experiment Station was undertaken primarily to study breeding for egg production and has been in progress for several years. Two years ago the Bureau of Animal Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture desired to cooperate in the work and is now contributing $1.000 per year to assist in t' carrying forward of the breeding e riments. Considerable unpublished data from these experiments have accumulated, but it has been decided to hold this matter for another year before it is published, at which time it will probably be issued as a bulletin of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The following papers on poultry ex- ments have been published. These a no longer available for distribution. A summary bulletin bringing the work up to date has been prepared for the Bureau of Animal Industry and will be shortly issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This can be obtained by addressing the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

This bulletin (130) in addition to containing accounts of experimental work, supplements bulletins 100 and 117 by outlining the methods of housing and handling the stock that have been adopted since these bulletins were issued.—C. D. W.]

The Incubator House and Poultryman's Residence.

Last fall the Station constructed an incubator cellar with a residence for the poultryman above it. The building is located conveniently near the poultry buildings and runs, and yet sufficiently removed to make it desirable as a residence.

Living so handy enables the poultryman to be in close touch with his work during the incubating and brooding season. While the incubators are in operation he inspects them at 5 o'clock in the morning and between 8 and 9 p. m. During the breeding period and while the chickens are on the range, it is desirable to have them liberated and fed as soon as they can see to eat in the morning, and not shut in at night until just before dark. This makes a long day for the caretaker, and the handy location of this house enables him to do his work more easily and satisfactorily.

The incubator cellar is 30 feet square, inside measurements, and 7 feet deep in the clear. Its wall are of concrete material and the floor is cemented. Two large cellar windows are in each of the west, north and east sides, but none on the south, as the warmth of the sun, admitted by windows on that side, would be liable to raise the temperature of the cellar during the middle of the day. The 6 windows give good light for caring for incubators and handling the eggs. Broad shutters darken the room when the eggs are being tested. The building has 2 chimneys and each has 2 separate flues. One flue in each chimney connects with the house fires and the other ventilates the cellar through adjustable openings. The chimneys being warmed by the up-stair fires cause the ventilating chutes to draw and ventilate the cellar quite well. In addition to these ventilators, the double doors in the rollway have openings 10 inches square with adjustable slides, and when necessary they are used to give complete ventilation. In the mornings, when the lamps are being cleaned and trimmed, and the out-of-door temperature is normal, both of the rollway doors are left partially open so as to quickly remove the odors of the lamps.

Thorough ventilation and a full supply of clean air to the incubator cellar are imperative. The incubator room is large enough to accommodate 16 of the largest size Cyphers incubators and leave space for passages between the machines for caring for lamps, turning and testing eggs, and other necessary work.

The house is one story and has 4 good well finished rooms, with lavatory and closet, on the first floor, and a large unfinished attic on the second floor. A shed for fuel and storage extends in the rear of the building and shelters the rollway entrance. The outside aspect of the building and its surroundings are attractive.

Brooder Houses.

Portable brooder houses of several different sizes and styles of construction are in use, sufficient to accommodate 2,000 chickens to maturity. The houses which have proved most satisfactory are built on shoes so they can be drawn near together for convenience in the brooding season, during April, May and June, and then to the grass fields for the range season.

Each of the houses accommodates 125 or 150 chicks from the time brooding commences until they are moved into winter quarters. They are large enough so the necessary work can be done comfortably in them. During rainy days, when the birds must be kept indoors, there is room for them and they will not suffer seriously if the floors are generously covered with cut clover or chaff. The birds in them are safe at night from storms, and all thieves that walk on four feet, crawl, or fly.

Such houses are almost indispensable to the person who raises few or many chickens. Their use removes many of the obstacles that tend to annoy and defeat the chicken raisers.

Each house is 12 feet long and 7 feet wide. The front wall is 6 feet 2 inches high, and the back 4 feet 2 inches high from floor to roof, inside. This allows a full grown person to stand erect in the front part of the house. The two shoes on which it is built are 4 by 6 inches in size and lie flat. Their ends are chambered on the under side so as to give them a sled runner turn. They are 14 feet long, and extend a foot outside of each end of the building. An inch auger hole slanting backward, and outward, is bored through each end of the shoes. For convenience in moving the houses, a short chain with an eye bolt in each end, which can be slipped through the auger holes and keyed, is used.

The floors are of 2 thicknesses of boards, breaking joints so as to prevent the air from drawing through. The walls and roof are boarded and the walls are covered with Red Rope Neponset, and the roofs with No. 2 Paaoid Roofing material. A door 2 feet wide and 6 feet high is placed in the center of the front wall with a window on each side of it. Each window contains 6 lights of 10 by 12 glass in one sash. It is hinged at the top and turns out, like an ordinary storm window. It is either closely buttoned down, or held open at different spaces, by hooks of various lengths. The longest opening is a foot, which leaves the window slanting out at an angle sufficient to give plenty of fresh air in warm weather when both windows are open and the houses full of birds. The advantages of hinged, over sliding windows are, that in stormy weather, rains and winds do not beat in to wet or annoy the birds, and free ventilation is not interfered with. The windows are covered with wire netting on the inside. A slide door, a foot square, is made down at the floor, near each end of the front of the building, for the chicks to pass through. A temporary board partition about 15 inches high divides the building crosswise into halves. Two No. 4 Peep-o'-Day brooders are used in each of these houses. They are put about 2 inches away from the back wall so as to allow the free passage of air to the intake openings in the sides of the brooders. They set about a foot away from each end of the building; and this space is filled in with an elevated platform and incline, which allows the chicks to go out through the brooder door and down a broad easy grade to the floor.

The Peep-O'-Day brooders are all made alike, with the lamp door at one side and the chick door at the other. They are located so that the lamp doors are towards the middle of the building and about 4 feet from each other, which gives about 2 feet between the lamp door and the temporary partition, sufficient room in which to attend to the lamps.

The hinges to the brooder cover are changed, so as to bring them at the back, which allows the cover to turn up against the back wall out of the way. These portable houses are well made, of good material, and if the shoes are kept blocked up from the ground, they should last as long as other farm buildings.

When they are drawn to the range for the warm season, they are turned back to the south, so that the sun may not shine in to the windows to heat the house and make it uncomfortable for the birds. Facing the north, the houses, furnish good cool shelter during the heat of the day.

The houses which the pullets occupy are blocked up about a foot and a half and the open space between the house and the ground gives cool shelter which the birds enjoy. The pullets do not trouble about going under the houses to spend the night, but the cockerels do, and we find it necessary to board around the cockerel houses and deny them the cool retreat.

As the cockerels develop in September and October, they become quarrelsome and there are bullies among them, at every house, that domineer over their mates during the day, and stand guard at the doors at dark. With such fellows in the way it is difficult getting the underlings into the house at shutting up time at night, if they have a chance to skulk under the building.

Houses for Laying and Breeding Hens.

Two styles of houses are in use at the Station. One is a thoroughly made double walled building, 16 by 150 feet in size. It is always kept above freezing by a water heater and a flow and return, two inch pipe, running the length of the building. This building was constructed with especial reference to comfort, health and productiveness. Small well made houses with single walls had formerly been in use, but they would get white with frost in cold weather, if shut up close enough so the birds did not suffer from cold during winter nights. When the weather moderated, the white frost would change to water and the straw litter on the floor would become damp and clammy. The birds showed their dislike for the damp straw by keeping off from it as much as they could. Such houses were unsatisfactory, and so the large warmed house was built. It was a decided improvement over the cold ones, because it could be ventilated and the birds not suffer with the cold. But it was not possible to secure sufficient ventilation, even though the house was moderately warmed, to prevent the presence of considerable moisture in the bedding.

Good yields of eggs were obtained from hens kept in that house and the losses of birds were not excessive. The hens showed, however, that they were not in the best condition by a little lack of color in comb, and energy in action. This house has not been abandoned and is highly prized for laying hens. Since breeding cockerels cannot be carried in the other houses, without danger of chilled combs, they are wintered in this warmed house until danger from chilling is past.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

September 25-28, 1906.

The fancier who did not visit the Poughkeepsie Fair of 1906 certainly missed one of the best fairs of the year. The officers of this fair certainly did old Dutchess county proud in their endeavor to give an A1 article.

They seem to realize fully that in order to draw a crowd, they (the crowd) must have something to see. Hence a good liberal premium list is given, with the result that we find in the poultry department, carload exhibits from Canada, and adjoining states, with nearly every variety represented. Two large tents, double-tiered, the old ones in the poultry building having been torn out and replaced by double-tiering of Empire coops, the old coops were put out in the open and filled with a grand exhibit of Waterfowl.

To speak of the merits of the different breeds would occupy too great space, for there was quality right down the line from the lordly Brahma to the diminutive Bantam, and competition in nearly every class.

It seems to me that Poughkeepsie is peculiarly fortunate in its officers. In Secretary Booth they surely have a winner, and his assistant is "simply the right man in the right place." The Superintendent of Poultry, Mr. T. C. Van Wyck, is certainly a past master in the business. I do not know of a fair association whose Poultry Department shows the effect of able and persistent work, that will outclass "Van's" persistent and conscientious labor for the department over which he presides, and we hope to see him at the same place for many years to come.

The fanciers among those we call to mind were:

W. A. Fuller, for many years a fancier, whose Dark Brahmas repeated their old trick of winning out. It certainly was a pleasure to shake his hand again.

J. F. Van Alstyne, who can breed Wyandottes that cause the boys to look twice at least. Rev. W. Tunnicliffe thinks that the American Fancier shoulld change the Eagle to the Silver Spangled Hamburg, and is willing to furnish a specimen to make the cut from.

George W. Tracey, one time 25-mile professional champion runner, thinks there is more fun and less hard work in breeding Reds than in running.

Mr. Edgar Briggs was there with a beautiful string of Leghorns and also canvassing for his book "Profits in Poultry Keeping Solved." We pronounce this book a valuable acquisition to the novice, and no mean addition to the professional poultryman's library.

R. D. Lovelace will dream of nothing but blue ribbons and Rose Comb Brown Leghorns for some time to come.

George Hillson and the word "Ivrolet" of course go together.

Mr. R. L. Hutchings took a run up to see the show in general and the Buff Rocks in particular.

Jonas Haynor, not satisfied with doing the trick at White Plains, had to repeat it here.

We also had the pleasure of shaking hands with W. D. Keeney, Superintendent of Oak Lawn Poultry Yards.

Mr. George R. Foddy, who is making rapid strides in Poultrydom, I certainly consider a valuable addition to the poultry fraternity.

And we must not forget Mr. N. Brusie, one of the old school, but strictly up-to-date on Buff Rocks.

Mr. A. E. Bushnell also was here, and considers that he has seen the fair, after a thorough inspection of the poultry.

Mr. James Glasgow not putting in an appearance, Mr. F. G. Bean was selected to judge in Glasgow's place, and Frank certainly proved himself capable of doing the trick. Besides, there were Burns, Oliver, Tallman and other well-known fanciers.

The awards will tell you the rest. They were as follows:

LIGHT BRAHMAS. — The best young and yearling birds for sale.—
J. A. Roberts, Malvern, Pa. 671tf

The illustration on our title-page this week represents a pair of Buff Laced Indian Games. The illustration was made from photographs taken by Mr. A. O. Schilling, of birds owned by Mr. Geo. W. Webb of Rochester, N. Y. The subjects of this sketch are not overdrawn; on the contrary, recent exhibits of this rare and new variety show wonderful progress and advancement over the first exhibits some three or four years ago, and handsome as the picture we present to our readers may be, there are birds that will equal and even surpass those represented this week. Mr. Webb, the owner of the birds, wants it distinctly understood that the credit for breeding such fine specimens belongs to Mr. W. H. Card, the originator. The latter presented Mr. Webb with some birds a few years ago and like a good true fancier, George Washington Webb gives the devil his due; not that "Wid" Card is a devil by any means, but a wholesouled, earnest fancier who has developed a new variety of fowl that promises well in the future because of its intrinsic merit as recognized to-day.

On page three we start a series of articles devoted to poultry experiments made at the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station. We are indebted to the latter for the interesting matter, as well as the photographs from which the illustrations accompanying these articles are made. This experiment station has done so much practical and effective work in the past and promises to do even more in the future, that we believe our readers will be greatly interested in the series we are now publishing.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is always an event each year of considerable importance to poultry fanciers, i. e., the poultry show held in connection with the Dutchess County Fair. This year was no exception, in fact it was more important than ever.

The writer of these notes has been a yearly visitor at this fine fair for nearly twenty years. He has seen the earnest work of T. C. Van Wyck, the veteran superintendent of poultry, meet with the success it deserved, and it is a pleasure to state that the birds of 1906, in number and quality, exceeded anything ever seen at Poughkeepsie. Furthermore, the arrangement of the exhibits was the best ever.

The old poultry building was stripped of its old coops and furnished with brand new Empire cages; two large and really excellent tents were utilized to hold double-tiered rows of Empire coops filled with choice feathered bipeds. Classification was very good and the light for judging birds equally so. Mr. Wemple, surnamed "Mr. Marsh," did the work of cooping in his most excellent form.

It is a pleasure to state that Secretary Booth and his able assistant, "Brer" Booth, were strictly the business end of the clerical department, and entries and awards were handled in the most systematic manner. Our friend "Jimmy" Glasgow found that out. He was several days shy in sending his entries, and paid the penalty of having them returned. We felt sorry for "Jim," but he was up against a system and the latter always wins when carried out to the letter. It was at old "Pokeepsie."

As James Glasgow, Esq., was slated to judge and failed to appear, Mr. F. G. Bean of the Keystone State was pressed into service and aided the other two judges to handle the thousands of birds on exhibit. It was no easy chore to judge at a show of this kind, as competition was very keen and the rivalry among exhibitors quite bitter in some classes.

Our representative, Mr. Weed, in his general report and awards, gives a comprehensive idea of what happened at the show and a few brief remarks regarding certain classes may show the importance this fair holds in the estimation of first class fanciers.

The Silver Spangled Hamburgs were finely represented, the quality being "way above par." We were greatly interested in the Rev. Tunnicliff's imported Crystal Palace cock, winner of the blue at that great show. The bird although heavy in moult, showed his fine qualities most decidedly. Fine in head, comb and lobes, grand in color of feather and deep and sharp spangling, he is bound to attract the attention of all Hamburg fanciers when he appears in his full plumage at the Madison Square Garden next January.

Another variety that had a number of stars was the Columbian Wyandotte. We handled two cockerels, well grown and nearly matured, that in color were far in advance of anything we have seen this season. The sire of these cockerels was the famous two hundred dollar cockerel at Madison Square Garden last winter. Blood will tell every time.

It is also gratifying to state that the Silver Wyandottes at Poughkeepsie were a credit to the breed and a thing of beauty and joy to the lover of these fine fowl. The winning pullets were beautifully open laced pullets of fine type, the first cockerel a most excellent bird in color and shape. Buff Wyandottes were also of a very high grade and good enough to be shown in the strongest competition.

The Leghorn classes were stronger than in some years, the quality of the Rose Combed Browns being the best we have seen in many seasons, first cockerel being a gem. S. C. White Leghorns a grand lot.

Plymouth Rocks furnished a very strong and fine collection of Buffs, a most excellent lot of Barred—well known winners in the bunch—and some superior Whites. White Wyandottes a strong class, with some very exceptional quality in the winners. Rhode Island Reds, as usual, were fine. They seem to like this breed in old Dutchess.

Asiatics were not large classes, but better and more numerous than at most fairs we have been at. Light and Dark Brahmas being in the A1 division.

Bantams and Waterfowl were up to a high standard and numerous, in fact the entire show was one of quality.

The only regrettable occurrence was the stealing of birds. A number of fine birds were taken from their rightful owners' coops, and efforts are being made to locate them. That it will go hard with the person or persons who swiped the birds is certain, as one owner told us he would spend the price of a goodly number of birds to land the culprit in jail.

Some years ago there was an epidemic of "swiping birds" at fall fairs, and some people who engaged in that pastime are now ostracised, or in other words are dead to the fancy. It is not a difficult matter to trace the thieves if quick action is taken by the management of fairs. Poor birds are seldom, if ever, stolen; only the real good ones are taken. And who will take the latter? Only a person who is posted on their value, and such a person has commercial reasons for taking what does not belong to him. Follow up the succeeding shows such pilferers are apt to attend and the stolen goods are likely to be recovered, provided their owners can identify them by the marks all careful exhibitors stamp their birds with. As the stealing of winning specimens is at present agitating many fanciers, as well as worrying the secretaries of fairs, it will be well for all exhibitors who have suffered loss by such practices to send in full particulars to The American Fancier, and if publicity can help in locating the guilty parties, we shall consider it a duty and service to the poultry fancy. A horse thief is bad; a chicken thief worse.

Brockton, located in the old Bay State, pulled off one of the greatest fairs we have ever witnessed, last week. The poultry and pigeon department was conducted in the most approved of manner; the buildings were new and built for the purpose. A full report with awards will appear in our next issue, and we believe it will open the eyes of the poultry and pigeon fanciers to one thing, viz.: That the cradle of the American Fancy, New England, has given to the fanciers of today a fall show that is not only a leader but a model for all others to follow and copy.

Hagerstown is on this week and it is as big and great as ever. This fine old Maryland Fair, with its mammoth poultry and pigeon department, is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. The spirit of the late and lamented John L. Cost, the pioneer of big shows in the country, still hovers around the Blue Ridge city, and the faithful still make their annual pilgrimage to his old home.

The premium list of the New York Show will go to press by November 1, and Secretary Crawford desires us to say for him that secretaries of specialty clubs who have announcements to make regarding meetings at the Madison Square Garden should do so at once, in order to have same appear in the premium list. The list of judges selected for New York will be announced shortly in these columns. There will be some important changes made in the judicial staff.

District Attorney William Travers Jerome, of New York city, has entered the ranks of chicken fanciers. He has purchased some fine birds of Peter J. Tyre, of Lenoxdale, Mass., which he will place on his farm at Lakeville, Conn. If Mr. Jerome becomes as strenuous a fancier as he is an expounder of democracy in politics, there will be lively times ahead in the chicken fancy of the Nutmeg State.

Mr. T. C. Van Wyck, Superintendent of Poultry at the Poughkeepsie Fair, writes us that he has the following birds, left, evidently, by someone who packed their own birds:

A White Rumpless cock and hen.

Golden Spangled Hamburg hen, leg-band No. 5.

Black Minorca pullet.

If the rightful owners of the above will claim the birds, the management will see that they are shipped promptly.

LIKE OLD TIMES.

To The American Fancier:

It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,

Very respectfully,
ELLIS DUNTZ.

Glencoe Mills, N. Y., May 3, 1906.

MINEOLA, N. Y.

September 25-29.

The Queens-Nassau Counties Fair opened Tuesday morning, Sept. 25, 1906, with 1076 entries in the Poultry and Pet Stock departmens, which was over 200 more entries than they had last year.

The judges and several of the exhibitors remarked it was the best quality show ever held on Long Island. The exhibits in the Plymouth Rock, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and Buff Orpington classes were large and very strong.

The Long Island Poultry Association offered over 150 special ribbons in different classes, through its secretary, Robert Seaman. The Bureau of Farmers Institute very kindly furnished a speaker, Mr. White, of Yorktown, N. Y., who addressed a meeting of poultrymen and others, Friday p. m., the 28th, at the poultry building. He gave a practical talk on poultry buildings, incubators, brooders and the care and feeding of poultry in general, which was much appreciated.

COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTES AT CAMBRIDGE FAIR.

F. J. Statia, of Granville, N. Y., made a great exhibit with his Columbian Wyandottes at the great Cambridge Fair, September 3d to 7th, 1906. There were four different breeders, but every breeders that shows against Mr. Statia will have to run a good race if they win, as it was admitted by good judges that Mr. Statia's Columbians had better hackle, tail and wings than some of the Light Brahmas that were shown at the fair. Mr. Statia is one of the largest breeders of this new variety in New York State. At the new Cambridge Fair, Statia's Columbians won 1st pen, 1st ck., 1st and 2d cockerel, 1st and 2d hen, 1st pullet.

HIS FIRST LOVE.

Editor American Fancier:

I will contract for space annually in The American Fancier, as I consider it my "first love" in the poultry paper line, having been a subscriber from its first issue. JAMES B. N. FITCH.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

Clean premises are a credit to any establishment; there is a constant source of gratification evolving from them, for both the owner and attendant.

I visited two buildings to-day, in one the floors were nicely covered with straw and platforms clean. The stock on this ranch is of one variety and made a pleasing sight to look at. I am willing to admit when I reached home I observed my flock, of all colors and variations, did not come in, one, two, three. At the other place the floors were unsanitary and the platforms sported a six months' accumulation of droppings.

The egg business of the present puts the gatherer in much the same position as the fellow carrying six pieces of money in his pocket, and upon becoming aware that five had escaped through a hole in the pocket, exclaimed, "One is a whole lot better than none at all." So with the fraternity; houses that formerly were turning out six dozen a day, now produce barely one dozen, and we can be thankful for the one.

Most breeders are pretty good judges. This is proved by a little circumstance which happened recently at a show. The winner of first on a pen was approached by a visitor and took under consideration an offer at a lower figure than was asked by him. Later a fellow exhibitor offered him an equal amount for a pick of three from his exhibit, and one bird from this pen was selected. Upon accepting the second offer the owner duplicated the removed bird and lay in wait for number one to show up, which he finally did and immediately began examining the coveted pen. Turning to the owner he charged him with removing one female, which was not denied. "Well," said the buyer, "I would not now take the pen as a gift. The one bird removed was worth the price I offered for the pen." While this shows that two foxy gentlemen were trying to do each other, it also shows the prospective buyer knew his business and could not be fooled by even a good imitation.

It is better for the reputation of a fancier to make one sale to a satisfied customer, than a number to people who feel they have not been treated fairly.

As I wrote a prospective buyer who did not enclose the coin, "Most poultrymen do business on their reputation for square dealing."

A trade carried on almost universally by mail, is one in which much confidence has to be placed in the party of the first party, by the party of the second part; therefore, in filling an order, give a little more rather than less in value.

The condition in which a consignment will reach its destination depends greatly on the method of handling prior to boxing. Try to give them a full feed and an opportunity to drink as much as they will before removing from their accustomed quarters. It is an easy thing to scatter grain in the coop before starting them on their journey, but if the journey be a long one, to water is another problem.

Many express agents give no heed to the comforts of the fowls consigned to their care, and never take notice if any need water or not.

Occasionally the agent is himself a fancier and finds caring for his charges a delightful relaxation and will, when cups are placed in convenient positions, pour the water in them rather than in the coop, to add to the discomfort of the fowls.

Where the destination will be reached in a day, water cups are no benefit.

BANTAMS AT MINEOLA.

The Bantam fowl keeps increasing its number every year at this fair, and the quality grows and keeps pace with their larger brothers.

The Game Bantams came in large entries. Black Red class as good as you would see at any show; some extra fine cock birds and cockerels; the pullets for their age showed all the show points, and by the time they are all feathered they will be up in the very first rank.

Duckwings, Golden and Silver, were represented by the grandest lot that has ever been exhibited on the grounds. 1st Silver cock has seen many shows come and go, but is still able to stick his nose under the wire first. Cockerels and pullets extra good ones, and will be heard from at some of the larger shows.

Brown Reds light entry, good quality. Pyles fair ones, badly out of show fix. White, about hold their own in numbers, they keep improving.

Cochin classes well filled. The exhibit of Buffs was extra fine, and it will be a long time before "Mineola" will have a better lot of Buffs. Whites, the exhibit did great credit to the breeders that produced them, it was one place in the poultry department where you would always find the largest crowd looking at the white beauties, Blacks, nice lot of fine blocky birds, best of color and show condition. Brahmas, something new to see such quality outside of Madison Square. 1st cock and 1st hen are good enough to suit the keenest fancy.

It is the opinion of the writer that the time is not far distant when we will see bantam shows. Let the bantam clubs join hands, and give us a trial show. Let every breeder pledge a certain number of entries, and success will be assured.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Nov. 20-21-22, 1906.

The Hartford Show Association was formed Sept. 25th, with Mr. W. L. Davis, Pres.; Mr. J. F. Crangle, Vice-Pres.; Mr. F. O. Groesbeck, Sec'y-Treas. The secretary is empowered to incorporate the Association and immediate steps will be taken in that direction. The Constitution reads under Article 11. Objects:—

The objects of this association shall be the holding of annual dog shows, or field trials or for the protection or benefit of dogs, the holding of poultry and pet stock exhibits and the improvement of live stock breeding. The promoters are all well known men to Fanciers through the country, Mr. Davis being owner of the Willow Brook Kennels, also Willow Brook Farm, Berlin, Conn.; Mr. Crangle, supt. of Valley Farm, Simsbury; Mr. Groesbeck, owner of Elm Poultry Yards, also Sky Farm. Mr. Groesbeck has for several years been Sec'y Treas. of the Hartford-Manchester Poultry Association, who gave annual exhibits, the last being a great success, and the combining dogs with poultry necessitated cancelling many entries and by forming the Hartford Show Association, with active membership to the American Kennel Club, also the American Poultry Association, will bring Hartford exhibits to highest possible standard drawing hundreds of breeders to the exhibit, as the winnings will count toward championship honors. The premium list of the Dog Show will be ready for distribution about Oct. 10th. Entries close Nov. 12th, the show to be given under the A. K. C. rules.

For further information address, F. O. Groesbeck, Sec'y, Hartford, Ct.

MOHNTON, PA.

The second annual Poultry and Pigeon Exhibition of the Wyomissing Poultry Association of Mohnton, Pa., formerly Mohnsville, Pa., will be held in the new Anderson's Hall with a floor space of 5,000 square feet, December 19 to 22, 1906. Exhibitors should not fail to exhibit here, as it is expected to be one of the best shows in this section, as it is but five miles from Reading, Pa., and is easily reached by the trolley car passing by the hall. Everything looks in favor of having a grand exhibition. Fanciers should not fail to send to the secretary for any particulars and premium list, which will be ready by Nov. 15. All correspondence cheerfully answered. GEO. W. HATT, Sec'y.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 12,493 cases. Sales under the call of the exchange were 34 cases of western, extra firsts, fresh gathered, spot, at 28c, three 50-case lots of western firsts at 25c, and 25 cases ditto at 25c. It will be noted that lower prices are being paid for the grade of firsts, which is the principal grade dealt in, and sales above 25c are becoming the exception. As noted at the close of last week, the market has gradually been drifting into an easier position by reason of limited demand for consumption, high prices asked by retailers, and liberal offerings of storage eggs. These conditions taken collectively have enabled the buying element to secure concessions. There were no changes made in the official prices of the several grades of fresh or held.

LIVE POULTRY.—Receipts were 20 cars. The largest part of the offerings consisted of chickens and it was late in the day before prices of weighing stock were settled. Chickens dropped to 12½, and roosters to 8½c. Fowls were firm at last week's closing price, 14c. There were no changes in turkeys, ducks or geese. Pigeons were extremely dull.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 1,[illegible] pkgs. Advices indicate that there will be a slight increase this week in shipments of fowls. The market opened quiet, and fluctuations in late prices were of minor importance. Spring turkeys, dry-picked, were a shade weaker at a decline to 16@20c. Roasting chickens and broilers were firmly held at late prices. Ohio and Michigan scalded stock was offered at 14@14½c, the prices noted being ½c lower than last week's closing figures. Undergrades of chickens and of undesirable size were very dull. There were no changes in ducks, geese or squabs.

DANBURY, CONNECTICUT

October 2-6, 1906.

The Danbury Fair for 1906 was a repetition of other years, but not the advance that has been so noticeable at Syracuse, Poukeepsie, Brockton, and other fairs of note throughout the country. Of course, when you see the names of Brundage, Sherry, Bohman, Zwick, Lueders, Fernwood Farm, Kinney and others, why we know that it means quality.

The American classes were in the lead with some grand birds. Much to our surprise, we found Mr. C. Brundage in charge of fruit and vegetables instead of poultry, and to show that they raise something else besides Blue Ribbon chickens was proved here when we found some 1,200 entries in fruit and vegetables. Here we also found Judge Hollenbeck, not judging chickens, but fruit and vegetables.

Mr. F. Bowman, superintendent of the Poultry Department, was very much handicapped by the taking of entries, by the management, after they were supposed to be closed and after the catalogue had gone to press. If there are any mistakes in the following awards they must be attributed to the same reason. The awards were as follows:

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS—Cock 1 Revere Poultry Yards, 2 Talman, 3 Kenney; hen 1 Kenney, 2 Wintzer; cockerel 1 Talman, 3 Sherwood; pullet 1-2-3 Kenney.

BUFF PLYMOUTH ROCKS—Cock 1-3 Hall, 2 Bohman; hen 1-3 Henderson & Fuller, 2 Zwick; cockerel 1-2-3 Bohman; pullet 1-2 Bohman, 3 Zwick.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. C. C. Moore of Shelby, Ohio, has been a successful breeder and exhibitor of Single Buff Orpingtons for some years, and his young stock this year is fully up to his former standard. He only keeps a few, being restricted by location of his property, but these few are good.

A million leg bands are a few. That is what the writer saw at T. Cadwallader's factory in Salem, Ohio. Mr Cadwallader is the oldest band man in the country, having built his present large business up from a small beginning. The writer spent several pleasant hours in his factory, watching the various processes through which various styles of bands pass from the raw material until they are bunched for shipment. This plant is so handled that an order regardless of size is shipped the same day as the order is received.

All the Barred Rock men know J. Z. Yant of Pierce, Ohio, who has been famous for years as a breeder of good birds. He has been a winner for years at the good shows, but more recently has been selling winners to breeders with the understanding not to show. His stock this year is extra good, and we may possibly again see his birds exhibited by himself in one or two of the big shows this year.

Mr. John Weiss, Ashland, Ohio, for some years a successful White Rock breeder, has fallen in love with the Black Orpington and is getting together a good bunch of this variety.

Mr. Weiss will not discard the White Rocks, as he has plenty of room to handle two varieties successfully.

Visitors at the poultry shows will remember the fine string of Buff Orpingtons that Mr. Ray Stutz showed at Cleveland, Ohio, last year, and at Pittsburg the year before. He has raised a good bunch of nice birds this year, and will probably again be successful in the show room this year. Mr. Stutz absolutely refuses to accept orders for eggs, but enjoys a good trade in stock.

There is only one reason that the Stark County Agricultural Society does not have a good poultry exhibit at Canton, Ohio—the management does not afford decent accommodations. Canton with its adjacent towns is fairly alive with good fanciers, and the above stated reason, is the only reason for lack of entries. Of course there are a few local fanciers whose bump of town pride always shows. Mr. John Yant showed some of his good Barred Rocks fully up to his standard, exhibited at the big shows during the past years. There are two Barred Rock Yants—John of Canton, and J. A., better known as Al., of Pierce, Ohio. They both have the goods. Mr. J. J. Bowers of Massillon, Ohio, had a good exhibit of White and Brown Leghorns, Wyandottes, and Rocks, showed in good condition. Mr. Bowers owns the largest and best equipped poultry plant in this section of the state.

PROFITS IN POULTRY KEEPING SOLVED

Title of my new book, which is revolutionizing the poultry business all over the country.

My great FEED @ $.10 per bushel will save you $25.00 on every 100 hens you feed a year, as well as increase your egg yield over 307. Nothing like it ever discovered for producing winter eggs and fertile eggs. For growing chicks, it has no equal. No mashes or cooking feed under this great system. Broilers grow 1¼ to 1½ lbs. in 7 weeks on this great feed. No science required to feed my system. Failure impossible. Circulars and testimonials free. Write to-day and stop that big feed bill.

Box O. EDGAR BRIGGS, New Rochelle, N. Y. 672-723

The Great Hagerstown, Md., Fair, Oct. 9-12, will close the fall fairs. The quality of youngsters shown has been an improvement over previous years. After a rather short intermission be gins the more important fixtures, the winter exhibitions.

Condition now will be the important factor to one's success. During the early shows, when all the birds were in moult, it was simply impossible to have birds in the proper shape, and many awards would have been changed providing other specimens, probably not mentioned, were in better condition.

It is a well-known fact that the most successful exhibitor is the one who can properly pen his variety. All birds intended for the winter campaign should be daily given a few hours in the pen; this not only makes them accustomed to the pen, but gives them a chance to get acquainted with their owner, become tame, which is a great point in exhibition birds. A really good specimen that is always posing sweet manned is indeed a hard one for the judge to pass.

The International Show held at Alexandra and the Crystal Palace Show have consolidated and will hold their exhibition at the Crystal Palace, London, November 13-15, 1906. A big annual show at the Crystal Palace has fortunately been saved to the fancy. No matter how good the International might have been, as the promoters have held some most excellent shows there, the fact remains that there is only one Crystal Palace.

English Specialty Clubs at the present time are very active obtaining specials for their coming annual fixtures. If the same energy which has made the specialty clubs in England such an overwhelming success could be displayed in America, what specials and exhibitors we would have.

* * * * *

At the Brockton Fair, held October 2-6, there were no less than five judges busily engaged in placing the awards in the pigeon section. Messrs. Gorse had the Dragoons, Pouters and Tumblers; Forbes, the Turbits, Owls and Magpies; McClellan, the Homers, and Rutter, the Fantails.

Complete list of awards will be published in the Oct. 20th issue.

The premium list of the coming New York Show will go to press October 20th. Secretaries of all Specialty Clubs should see that Mr. H. V. Crawford has all lists of specials by that date. The coming Madison Square Garden exhibition will gather the greatest collection of pigeons yet seen in this country.

The Eastern Fantail Club will hold its annual meeting at Madison Square Garden, January 2-6, 1907. This year the club is anxious to obtain round pens for their entries. The cages used for pigmies are the ones desired. Fantails have always been penned in England with this style and show to great advantage.

Messrs. N. M. Shaw, Jersey City, N. J., Wm. McIntyre, Delhi, N. Y., Dr. Fred'k C. Peterson, Smithtown, L. I., have recently joined the Eastern Fantail Club.

What has troubled many, in the building of their lofts, is the question of which makes the better flooring, wood or concrete? Although both have their advantages and disadvantages, we prefer a good tongue and groove floor of wood. Concrete although easy to clean and sometimes rat proof, not always, as we have often noticed where rats had gnawed through, it is extremely cold, especially in winter, and draws considerable dampness, a very objectionable feature and the cause of endless amount of disease among the pigeon tribe. A good wood floor properly covered with sawdust is about the best for most any style of building for pigeons.

* * * * *

The breeding season is over, and all birds should be separated by this time. Pigeons moult badly, and some not at all, while breeding. The best plan is to divide the loft in two sections by a solid partition, providing the fancier has only one loft. Don't use wire netting for partition, as they will constantly see one another, always flying up on the wire, thus damaging the feathers. Give them some good iron capsules to help them change their garments, and you will notice a decided improvement in the appearance of your stud.

WESTERN TUMBLER CLUB.

By this time you all have your prospective candidates for blue ribbon honors hatched and through breeding. I presume you are all back from your summer vacations and will have a little spare time to think of club matters. You all know the Western Tumbler Club has a committee at work on our new Constitution and By-Laws and standards, which will soon go to the printer. This book will be a big expense item, and unless this part is covered by advertisements it will have to be paid out of club funds, and when we do this we are taking from funds that would otherwise go for special prizes at our next club meet. Now, it is up to you, fellow members; by taking space it will help pay for this book and will help you in sales, as this will go direct to the fanciers interested in Tumblers. We all want a big list of specials to compete for, so let us pull together. Send an ad. to our Sec'y, D. W. Johnson, 2683 N. Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill., and he will do the rest.

In union there is strength, so we must all do a little missionary work to make this the banner year in increased membership. There are many Tumbler breeders around the country who may be induced to join us in our hobby. Make the work as easy as possible for our Secretary, for he has plenty of it at the best, and is giving his time and work gratis for our benefit, and the advancement of the Tumbler.

G. J. ASMAN, Pres.

FAST FLYING BY WESTERN BIRDS.

Sixty-one miles in 56 minutes is the record fly by Glenkirk, a homing pigeon owned by Arthur Melrose, of the Spokane Homing Club. The bird was released at Ritzville, Wash., and reached its owner at Minnehaha Park, Spokane, in the time noted. Glenkirk has the reputation of being the fastest homing pigeon in the Northwest, and the club has fifty other honers. Mr. Melrose is president of the club, which was organized last spring. He has raced pigeons in England and the Continent and all over the United States.

The club has its races every week, flights of from 50 to 300 miles being made. The race from Walla Walla to Spokane, recently, was won by Siwash, owned by Rex Gardner, with Black Hawk, owned by James Wilbert, second. The distance is 110 miles, and was covered in a little less than three hours.

There are twenty-three entries for the coming race from Pasco to Spokane, a distance of 150 miles. The club is also planning for a long distance race from the Dalles, Oregan, to Spokane, from 250 to 275 miles across country, in which only the older birds will be entered. Among those who will compete are Mr. Melrose, Warren Clarke, Phil Brooke, Stanley and Howard Yancey, James Wilbert, Rex Gardner and George Hussey.

Buffalo Bigg, a homing pigeon of the red checker variety, owned by Howard Yancey, of Spokane, defeated Amaus, Jr., of the blue checker type, in a homing race from Connell, Wash., to Spokane, 100 miles, by four minutes, covering the distance in three hours and 15 minutes. The birds are seven months of age. The flight was made in the morning.—In Pigeon Flying.

NEWARK DISTRICT.

The 100-mile race of the young bird series of Independent District was flown on September 2d, 150 birds competing. The conditions were as follows: Weather, clear; wind at start, southwest; wind at home, southwest. Liberated at Wilmington, Del., by Mr. Van Denburg.

THE SHOW ANTWERP.

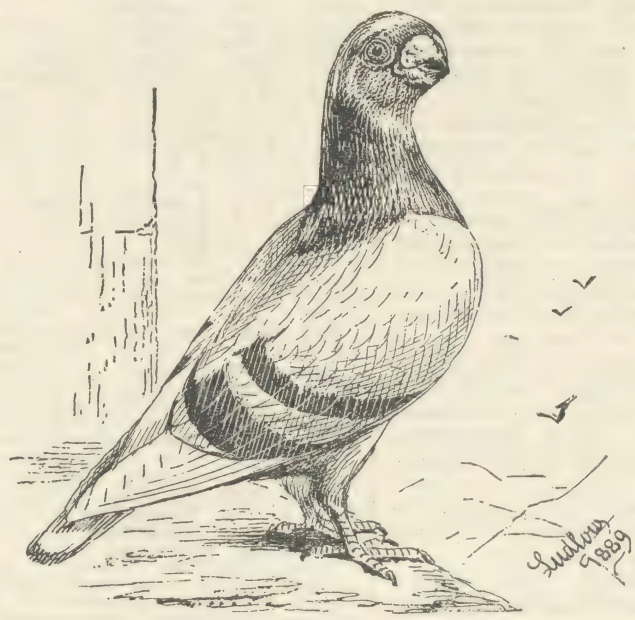
One of the most valuable of the later additions to our stock of fancy pigeons is that known as the Show Antwerp, which term is used to distinguish it from the Antwerp Homer, or Flying Homer, or Belgian Voyageur, by all of which terms the latter is known. The Show Antwerp is undoubtedly derived from the same source as the Homer, namely, the Smerle Pigeon, but it has been bred very largely for head points, and there is a grave suspicion that in order to develop these a cross with the Barb has been resorted to, for in some birds we meet with that highly developed wattle, standing out from the head, which is the most striking feature of the Barb. Such is, however, against the appearance of the Antwerp, which should have a bold, not a sunken, eye, and though a good wattle is desirable if the eye stands out well from it, there is danger of the wattle growing away beyond it as the bird matures.

One of the leading authorities on the Antwerp, Mr. F. Machin, wrote an excellent article some time ago in the Fanciers' Gazette, and I quote a portion of it, for it contains the latest expression as to the general character of the Antwerp. As to the head I shall have more to say with regard to that later on. In this article Mr. Machin observed that of all varieties of the pigeon tribe none has risen more rapidly into public favor than the Antwerp, nor has any other variety emerged so rapidly from comparative obscurity and become such general favorites. Fanciers can well remember the time when the Antwerp indicated a low taste, and inferior conception of the beautiful and the valuable, and its admirers were derided for countenancing this commoner in company with the king of pigeons and his immediate and worthy followers—the chief of the so-called "high class" varieties. But what is the idea of Antwerps to-day? They have not soiled, spoiled, not contaminated, supplanted nor diminished the appreciation of other kinds. No, certainly not. Why should they? On the contrary they have unmistakably supplemented the ever growing band of fanciers, and forced in upon and broken down the old-fashioned notions of certain enthusiasts, who could see no merit in the new fangled Antwerp, only as a pie pigeon. The Antwerp has become appreciated by a wider circle, probably, than any other kind, being a bird of development. Up to his fifth year he is gradually improving continuing to rise in favor until maturity is attained.

Antwerps when first classified as Show pigeons (now about twenty-five years ago) were chiefly of the short-faced type. Whatever were tolerated in the breeding pen, short faces were only at that time recognized. Owly-headed birds were in abundance, and those in the early days were kindly looked upon as necessaries for the development of the perfect ideal, then in its embryonic stage, and, even as an ideal, scarcely recognized in its fullness as it is to-day, so that the distinctively short-faced type were the early pioneers of the tribe. Now we have a distinct sub-division, namely, short, medium and long, thus giving a chance to admirers of each kind; and, difficult as it at times appears in adjudicating upon them, and drawing the oftimes very fine lines of distinction between these tribes of the one great family, still I believe in its wisdom, and advocate its continuance. Indeed, it is a sub-division or classification which has given complete satisfaction to all sections and admirers of the Antwerp.

In taking the three divisions of the Antwerp, namely, short, medium and long-faced, face must be taken to indicate the distance from the eye to the beak, and in proportion to the length of face possessed by the different varieties they are classified accordingly. The short-faced partakes more of the bald-headed type, the head whether viewed from front or sides, having the appearance of being round or full; the medium and long are more of what is called the barrel-headed type, particularly the medium, which generally possesses a better back skull than the long. Of late there has been considerable and prolonged discussion as to the devision between these three varieties, for it has been found that one and the same bird would win as a medium under one judge and as a long under another, being, in fact shown as either, in order to fit the arrangements of classes at shows. An attempt has been made to settle the matter, and in the spring of 1890 three ideal heads were published in the Fanciers' Gazette, drawn by Ludlow in accordance with the views of Mr. Machin. In these the short-faced was drawn to 1¼ inches, the medium to 1½ inches, and the long to 1¾ inches, in each case the measurements being from the centre of the eye to the point of the beak. Of course these measurements can only be taken as approximate, for much depends upon the formation of the bird's head. A very large headed Antwerp, both broad(high, and massive all through, would have the appearance of and be a short-face even if it measured 1½ inches, whereas a small headed bird would be unmistakibly long even if he only measured the same length. But these measurements may be taken as approximate, and the publication of them has led to the matter being taken up by the Antwerp club, though the results achieved thus far have not been very satisfactory, yet we are on a fair way to have it settled. And the same body have undertaken to draw up a standard of points for the breed, there being none at the present time. The following are the leading points of the Antwerp pigeon:

Head—Large as possible, broad,with a perfect and lofty oval sweep from back to front, the beak, which is embraced in the sweep of skull, short and thick.



Eye—Large, full, standing well out, and of a good color.

Neck—Fairly long, but from its thickness not appearing so.

Wing Mutts—Prominent, and in keeping with the large size of the body.

General Style and Carriage—Bold and erect.

Color—Silver duns, red chequers, blues, and blue chequers are the chief, though there are others.—By "Antwerp,"

"MINEOLA FAIR, 1906."

Mineola has again scored a great success in the poultry department. With the competition confined to Long Island, 200 more entries were gathered than last year, with competition open to the world.

Messrs. Seaman, Van Dewater and others work unceasingly in their efforts to make the show a success, and have certainly succeeded, having amassed a show of 1026 entries, the quality of which was generally good.

The usual fall show trash was conspicuous by its absence, there being fewer poor birds than last year. Handsome specials were offered by the Long Island Poultry association for the best male and female in each of the principal varieties. A catalogue of the entries and prize winners was issued and sold on the grounds. "Spratts' Patent" cooped and classified the show. Chas. M. Smith, 39 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, Cyphers Co. and Donovan & Burns had large exhibits of supplies and feed on hand. "Billie" Stanton and Charlie Smith did the judging to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

The winners in the American class were, in the most cases, A No. 1, and will hold their own at larger shows.

Barred Rocks showed up fine. 1st and 2d cockerels were barred to the skin. 1st hen and 1st and 2d pullet were of the winning kind, and 1st, 2d and 2d pens showed many good points. Buff Rocks were better than ever before. White Rocks were as good as can be seen anywhere. J. K. Major's 1st hen, pullet and pen will show up well against the best. But with 50 birds in the single class and 6 pens, one can expect good birds.

The hottest in the show was the White Wyandottes. A fine collection of 9 cocks, 9 hens, 10 cockerels and 11 pullets, with 7 pens added, a total of 74 birds. Among them, specimens that will win in almost any competition. Rosemary Farms won the cream in fowls and Wm. W. Titus in young stock.

1st cock, Rosemary special for the best male, a fine, big, blocky bird, snow white in every section, comb could follow the head more, well conditioned; deserves the place.

2d, I. W. Van Sise, nice, big bird, but very rough on shank and coarse in headgear; loses also on condition; longer on back than 1st.

3d, Sidney Y. Sullivan, loses to 1st and 2d on feather, bit hollow on breast.

HENS.

1st, Rosemary, an easy winner, fine in shape, pure white, and in pink of condition.

2d, Sullivan, good shape; loses to 1st on size and condition.

3d, Robt. G. Anderson, loses to 1st on shape.

COCKERELS.

One of the finest collections out this year. Titus wins 1st, 2d and 3d on large, shapely birds that will go further along the line and win out.

The same may be said of the pullets. Titus repeats his performance in cockerels. The 2d prize pullet was the best shape for a pullet we have ever seen. 1st pullet won special for best female.

PENS.

1st, Rosemary, cock and hens are easy winners; females worthy of special mention.

2d, Titus, loses to 1st on condition; male a bit out under in breast; females good, but out of condition.

3d, Geo. H. Smith, close on 2d; cock a trifle creamy; hens very good, one of them a peach.

Golden Wyandottes are always a hot class at Mineola and this year was no exception to the rule. Geo. H. Smith showed some beauties, and Van Sise's pullet was a gem. Buff Wyandottes showed good color and form. Partridge Wyandottes were put in the A. O. V. class, but nevertheless some fine specimens were shown. Billie Stanton pronounced Wm. H. Lewis' 1st pullet to be the best he had seen in a long time. The winning cockerel and hen also showed up well.

S. C. Rhode Island Reds were one of the hottest classes in the show. The winning cockerel and pullet were models of their kind and nearly all of the birds were a rich, even red.

Light Brahmas were a grand sight with a class of 6 cocks and 13 hens No young stock was shown. The hens were a very even lot. 1st hen, of Bright-Home Farms, was very strong in hackle and saddle striping, with 2d hen close up. The 1st cock was a good bird, but out of feather; will make a strong cock when feathered.

The Cochin classes, especially in Buffs, were full and good in shape and color. Last year we valued the American Dominiques at 50c each; this year they reached the 75c mark. If they keep on improving at this rate by the time we get ready to cash in our checks they will be quite some pumpkins. Buff Orpingtons were all there. Dr. Kyle's display of Buffs and Blacks was well worth looking at, the winning cock and hen were good enough for any show and the young stock showed many good points. Black Orpingtons, especially in hens, were of the A No. 1 sort.

The Dorkings were of the kind one likes to see. They should be bred more, for they are a fine fowl.

The Leghorn classes right through were well up in both quality and numbers, and many fine birds were shown. The Rose and S. C. Browns were fine in color, and the winning chicks were the best we have seen since N. Y. The S. C. Whites shown by Deepdale Farms looked good enough to show anywhere. Mr. Van Sise showed the best pair of R. C. Whites we have seen this year. Wm. H. Lewis' pair of S. C. Buffs were one of the attractions of the show, the pullet grand in type and color, and the cockerel was not far behind.

The S. C. Black Minorca class was full of quality and would stand in any competition. Mr. Ballard's birds were of the true Minorca type and reflect great credit on their breeder. R. C. Blacks were few in numbers, but good in quality. Black Spanish were in the same boat. The Polish classes, while there were not many in each class the birds showed good points and will win in more competition. The same may be said of the Hamburgs. Ex. Games are always strong at Mineola. The stars this year were the B. B. Red hen and the White cockerel; he was the best we have ever seen. Pit games were out in force, numbering 34 birds. The winners were good ones.

Rosemary Farm's exhibit of White Indians and S. C. Brown Leghorns was one of the sights of the show, and the Indians closely approach the type of the Cornish Indians. Wm. H. Lewis showed some White Indians of remarkable quality.

Many acquaintances were made and most of us could have held on another week.

The Long Island Poultry association was instrumental in getting Prof. Rice to give a talk on Poultry, which was enjoyed by all those present.

As a whole, the show was voted a great success by all.

HERBERT B. ROWEDDER.

CONKEY'S ROUP CURE

It Cures Roup

The most dreaded disease of the poultry yard. Why permit the ravages to go on when the cure is so easy and sure?

It's Guaranteed

Money back cheerfully if it fails. That's the offer we've been making for years to its many thousand users; but the cure does not fail. No trouble to administer. Simply put it in the drinking water, the fowls take their own medicine.

In 50c and $1.00 packages. On sale with poultry supply dealers or druggists everywhere. Don't accept a substitute. Insist on Conkey's.

THE CONKEY BOOK of poultry diseases, price 25c, is now mailed free on receipt of the postage, 4c in stamps and names of two other poultry raisers. Invaluable to every raiser of poultry. Send for it.

10,000 CHICKENS Raised With 36 Universal Hovers

Here is some more evidence of the wonderful adaptability of Prairie State Universal Hovers. During the past season W. R. Curtis & Co., on their famous Niagara Farm, at Ransomville, N. Y. successfully raised Ten Thousand Chicks with thirty-six Prairie State Universal Hovers. They have used as many as four hovers in one house, transferring them to other houses after the chicks no longer require them. Messrs. Curtis further state that during the rush season it was necessary to place in some houses as many as three hundred chicks, and the greatest loss in any of these instances did not exceed ten chicks. Can you conceive of a more economical and successful manner of rearing chicks?

Poultry-raisers are taking their heating apparatus out of other makes of brooders and installing in their place Prairie State Universal Hovers. We are at present remodeling brooding houses on large poultry plants, taking out expensive pipe systems that have proven unsuccessful and installing our modern brooding devices.

One of 40 Colony Houses used on Niagara Farm —fitted with Prairie State Universal Hovers

Think of this if you want to raise more chicks next year. Let us plan your brooding system for you now. Do not hesitate because your wants are not great, our systems fit the greatest or smallest plants and are as profitable for the little fellow as for the big one. Remember we positively guarantee our Brooding Systems. Write for our catalog, it shows the way and the why.

THE BROCKTON SHOW

The Brockton Fair, held October 2 to 5, is the "real thing" in the old Bay State. The famous shoepeg town is located not so very far from the city of culture—Boston—and might reasonably be classed as a Boston function as well, for thousands of people travelled from the Hub to Brockton on the two big days. We might say all roads, electric especially, lead to the fair. We never saw such a crowd handled as ably as the one that was carried by the trolley lines in Brockton. It was an endless chain of cars, no waits, busy every minute, and consequently little or no crowding. When a hundred thousand people pass through the gates of the Brockton Fair in one day and there is no delay in handling such a crowd, the excellent system prevailing will be readily recognized and appreciated. Of course it was Brockton weather and that means blue skies with old Sol full of smiles. It was ideal fair weather, which becomes an ideal fair such as Brockton is. The grounds are very large, afford many pleasant resting places in the bit of woodland that lends a charm to the scene. The buildings are clean and modern, indicating the true New England style of having everything in ship shape order. The management is more than liberal in treating exhibitors and their friends. Attending such a fair is a pleasure.

But what readers of the American Fancier will be interested in most is the poultry building, exhibits and management. We will start right off by stating that Brockton has set the pace ,established a model that all fairs must follow or lose their prestige.

The poultry and pigeon departments were the best managed of any we have ever been to in the United States of America as far as fall shows are concerned. We will further add that but very few winter shows can claim equality with Brockton.

The buildings are brand new and specially designed for the exhibiting of poultry and pigeons. The main building covers something like seventeen thousand square feet, the pigeon and bantam pavilion, which is separated by the offices of the secretary and superintendent, is surprisingly large and roomy. Buildings are topped with a monster roof, very high from the floor, splendidly lighted from all sides and top, wide aisles and exits so numerous that there never is a congestion of visitors to interfere with the pleasure of viewing the exhibits.

The coops were built by the Empire Cooping Company and are double-tiered in the single entry open classes and arranged in twos for the breeding pens in the main building. The pigeon and bantam department is triple tiered. This gives a capacity for 3,500 entries and every coop except a very few were occupied. The absentees had entered but failed to send their exhibits in time to be judged.

The rule at this show is one bird in a coop, except in breeding pens, and entries received after coops are all engaged, are returned.

Entries close ten days prior to the opening of the show and under no pretext whatever will any be received after the closing date. This is straight business and inspires confidence.

The premium list was a beautiful piece of printers' work and indicated the high class exhibition held at Brockton. The cash prizes were liberal, three dollars to first and two dollars to second, with a fifty cent entry fee being drawing cards, to say nothing of the valuable silver cups offered in each important variety for best two males and two females. The five different silk ribbons designating the winning birds in each class were in keeping with all the rest of the show.

To Secretary Rogers and Treasurer Packard, the writer is indebted to many courtesies shown, not only to him but to the American Fancier. The gentlemen worked hard to make everything run smoothly and succeeded most admirably. Owing to an unavoidable accident to the printing plant, no catalogues were issued in time for the show and a corps of clerks were kept busy writing the names of exhibitors and their varieties on cards which were attached to the coops in order to satisfy the public and exhibitors who desired to see who won and what in the bird represented.

The judging began promptly at nine o'clock Tuesday morning of the first day and barring specials and a few heavy classes was completed by five in the afternoon of the same day. The judging was done behind closed doors, visitors and exhibitors being barred out. The judging cards were models of simplicity and accuracy, the classification perfect. The following judges handled the birds and placed the ribbons: W. B. Atherton, White Plymouth Rocks, Partridge Wyandottes, Dark Brahmas, Faverolles and Indian Games; A. F. Smith, Barred Plymouth Rocks and all Leghorns and Mediterranean classes; W. H. Card, Silver and Golden Wyandottes, Polish, Ornamental Bantams and Geese; C. A. Wheeler, Light Brahmas and White Wyandottes; E. J. Benson, Cochins and Cochin Bantams; A. F. Dykeman, Ducks and Miscellaneous; Lester Tompkins, Rhode Island Reds; J. H. Drevenstedt, Buff Plymouth Rocks, Buff Wyandottes, Silver Pencilled Wyandottes and Game Bantams.

The Pigeon judges were C. A. McClellan, C. F. Fobes, F. W. Gorse and Jesse Rutter.

The quality of the birds in the majority of the classes was so high that careful judgment on the part of the adjudicators was necessary and as far as we could ascertain the decisions in most cases were received with favor and whatever criticism may have been expressed was caused by the closeness of the competition in certain classes. And that must be expected at all shows of this character.

The Asiatic classes were far better than at any fall show this season, Light Brahmas in particular being of a very high order of merit. And why not? New England is the home of the Light Brahmas and but for descendants of the Pilgrims and Puritans, where would that noble old variety be to-day?

The American classes were the star features of the show. They filled in every direction except in Barred Rocks, which, good as the classes were, cannot be said to be up with the leaders. Judge Smith, who ably handled and judged this variety, expressed himself quite strongly to the writer regarding the dropping off in entries of America's most popular fowl. Another year we hope to see at Brockton a great display of New England's famous production—the Barred Plymouth Rock. To win a prize at Brockton on Barred Rocks is no small honor and we believe that fanciers of this variety will be quick to appreciate this fact and take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the liberal management in the hustling shoe city fair. White Plymouth Rocks were there good and plenty. Ask Atherton. The latter had his hands full and was confronted by many "beauty brights" in this very popular variety.

Buff Plymouth Rocks kept up their reputation as popular favorites, the number and quality being considerably above the average. The old fowls showed up well, and if anything had a little the best of the youngsters, although the first cockerel was a gem in color and fine in type. He was the early bird that caught the worm. Several others not so well developed will make rather warm company later on. First and second cocks were particularly strong in type and color, but not in the best of feather.

Wyandottes, great classes in Whites, Buffs, Partridge and Silver Pencilled, Goldens, Silvers and Columbians, while not so numerous, held up in quality all the same. Our old friend, Charles Wheeler, had a big job on his hand, judging White Wyandottes, and if ever a man worked hard and conscientiously, he did. Competition was really very keen in the cockerel and pullet class, the old birds not being in sufficient feather to get a true line on their quality. We particularly fancied an unplaced cockerel in coop 386 who looks as if he might make trouble at later shows. He was a bad actor when Mr. Wheeler judged him, but has the intrinsic value stamped in every section. He is a Wyandotte all over, when he feels like "showing it." And there were others.

Buff Wyandottes, the finest and strongest classes we have handled outside of New York and Boston and fully equal to the best shown at the above mentioned shows. Old cocks in heavy moult, first showing best in type, second better in color. First hen a beauty in color and good in type. First cockerel a beautiful bird in type; good head and comb and a rich golden buff all over; second a nice type, not so sound in color in all sections, third, not ripe but fine in color; fourth a beautiful bird in surface color, but misses in having too much white in primaries. Pullets, a beautiful lot, the best bunch we have seen at any show, i. e., the five winners taken in consideration. The first pen was quality of very high degree stamped on every bird.

Silver Pencilled Wyandottes were very numerous and good, with a number of stars, notably winning pullets, which in clean steel gray color and sharp pencilling and type can be placed in a class by themselves. The old birds were full of quality of not of feathers. Pens equally good. There was one pen, however, not in competition, that contained a Silver Pencilled cockerel, which in comb, head points, plumage and typical shape, can be safely labelled the finest and most typical Wyandotte ever shown. He was the cynosure of the many eyes that have seen good Wyandottes and such experts as Weed and Card remarked: "How can they beat him?" He would make the American Standard of Perfection illustration, good as it is of a Silver Pencilled Wyandotte, look very much like the famous "thirty cents." As the American Fancier does not care a red cent whether a bird belongs to an advertiser or not, as long as the feathered star is worthy of a notice, we have no hesitation whatever in stating that this bird was bred and raised by S. W. Rogers, secretary of the poultry department of the Brockton Fair.

The rest of the Wyandottes, as well as some other classes, our old college chum "Wid" Card will report below.

As to Game Bantams, we might as well state that the best fellows in the business come very near being all represented here. Competition was very keen in all classes, and if any of the boys don't think so, drop the writer a card. He had his hands full sifting out the winners. The awards will tell who exhibited and that is quite eloquent testimony as to the quality. Perhaps it may not be positively wrong to state one thing, however, viz.: Black Red Game Bantams, the most numerous and popular of all, are not what they were or should be. By that we mean, they are not a carefully bred, do not show up as strong as a class, albeit the individual winners may be top-notchers, as they should. What's the matter, boys? Ask Thornton, Congdon and Peirce.

Here is what the Hon. W. H. Card, originator of the Buff Laced Indians and Judge at Brockton, has to say regarding his classes:

White Crested Black Polish.—A grand class, in fine feather and color for this season of the year. Golden Polish, both bearded and plain, were well represented, an exceptionally grand hen winning first prize in bearded Goldens. Silver Polish, a very fine lot in both varieties. White Polish, a nice lot, but handicapped with moult. Will appear much better at winter shows.

Hamburgs.—All classes but Silver Spangled, as usually seen at most shows. Silver Spangled brought out four cocks, seven hens, five pullets, and one cockerel. The very best cock, otherwise, was disqualified for red ear lobes. 1st, 2nd, and 3rd going to birds in one-half moult. Hens in better condition, and winners well-spangled, a close race for the ribbons. Pullets the same; cockerel, ordinary.

Silver Laced Wyandottes. Cocks ordinary; hens not extra; cockerels, fair size, and maturity winning. An unplaced cockerel, the best bird in the class, but very young, in poor moult and small,but will be heard from later. Pullets were the gems of the variety. 1st an easy winner, competition closer for other ribbons. Two good pens shown. 1st pen very even as a whole. Golden Wyandottes were a small class, badly shown, in poor moult and immature. Not up to former displays.

Bantams. Golden Sebrights.—Seven cocks shown. 1st a very small, evenly-laced and grandly blended colored bird of good shape, but not at his best, because of slight indisposition. The rest of the class, quite large in size, 3rd cock noticeable for fine shape and carriage. Seven hens shown. 1st very small and grand in color and lacings. 2nd, grandly laced but uneven in color, the others showing a profusion of square instead of oval lacings.

Young stock, ordinary. Silver Sebrights.—The Silver Cup winner on Ornamental Bantams. Four cocks. 1st a very narrow-laced, clear-colored, grand-shaped bird. 2nd, great on shape, but heavier in lacings; 3rd a grand, narrow-laced bird, but flights gone in one wing, and in general shape poor. Seven hens. 1st small with narrow, even lacings and clear color. 2nd, narrow- laced, but loses on breast-lacings. The rest of the class very good. Rose Comb Blacks. —1st cock, and 1st and second hens, ahead of classes, being very small, of typical shape, and great color. Young stock ordinary. Rose Comb Whites. 1st cock, 1st hen, grand winners and splendid types. 1st cockerel, clear-white, nice type, no cream in plumage, but fails on legs, which were inclined to shade to a foreign color. 2nd has good legs, but that is his chief asset. 1st pullet an easy winner. Booted Bantams.—1st cock wins on type and condition. 2nd, although in poor condition, has clear nice plumage, and good type. 1st hen wins in shape. Japanese Bantams.—Three varieties, and shown in poor condition, except 1st cock of the Black Japs, a very brilliant fellow in plumage and carriage. W. C. Black Polish Bantams.—Simply a cockerel and pullet of undersized, big Uolish, and so marked and branded. White Polish Bantams. —A very fine lot, especially worthy of notice is 1st cock.

WIND BREAKS.

Muslin is so cheap that it can be easily arranged for the purpose of providing a shelter or windbreak on cold, windy days. It is the cold wind that freezes the combs and causes the birds to become sick. If they have some kind of protection, however, they can endure quite a severe degree of cold and as muslin is cheap and can be sewed to any shape desired it should be utilized.

CHATHAM, NEW YORK

October 2-5, 1906.

The poultry exhibit at the big Chatham, N. Y., Fair, held October 2-5, 1906, was the largest in the history of its society. Frank Hamm, the well-known Barred Rock breeder, and George W. Tracey, the Rhode Island Red Specialist of Kinderhook, New York, placed the awards, Mr. Tracey judging the Buff Rocks, Hamburgs, Wyandottes, all varieties, Houdans, Orpingtons, the Games, all varieties, and Rhode Island Reds. The Reds were the largest class, and some good birds were shown, John Mackey of Hudson, New York, and Alex. Sitcer of Valatie, New York, dividing the honors on Single Combs. The latter also carried off the honors on Buff Wyandottes. The Wyandottes, White and Buff, were a strong class, as were also the S. C. White Leghorns, J. Frank Van Alstyne showing two very fine young pair. Mr. Van Alstyne also showed some nice Silver and Columbian Wyandottes, and it is needless to say that he carried off all the firsts. The Rocks were a small class, the first prize Barred Rock pullet was a beauty, it was also the first prize White Rock cockerel. There were quite a number of good birds, but there were also a lot of poor ones, and one would wonder at the judgment shown by some in selecting birds to show. The birds were shown in pairs, and where only one award was given it signifies that only one pair was shown or the others were disqualified. The judging gave good satisfaction, as there were no complaints of any account heard during its fair.

Below are the awards:

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS—Pair 1 (old) A. Sitcer, pair 2 B. Nutting; pair 1 (young) A. Whyland, pair 2 Sitcer.

There are three propositions that govern all sides and phases of Poultry culture, as pertaining to the actual rearing of fowls. No matter whether for the pit, egg production, or show pen, the same rules may be followed. Their very simplicity counts against their proper observance and use. Of these three we have spoken so much that we fear an early attack of the three graces.

The first of these is good, comfortable, dry quarters for both the breeding fowls and the chicks; the second, thorough cleanliness in and about their quarters; the third, proper food and water supply. If these three rules are strictly adhered to, the successful rearing of your fowls is assured. If not, just so surely will you invite,with open arms, the failure which follows.

If mankind is foolish enough to move his family into a new, damp house for their abode, the chances are that the scourge of diphtheria will visit his home with its usual results; the same ailments come to our fowls when compelled to live in damp, unhealthy quarters. Good, dry, comfortable quarters are an absolute necessity for success with poultry. No matter how cold it may be outside, fowls will prosper in dry comfortable quarters without any artificial heat. A long continued wet season counts for far less against them if they have a comfortable dry place to go into when so disposed. Whether cold or warm, absolute freedom from dampness, as far as possible, must be the rule in the living quarters of both old and young fowls.

Cleanliness is an absolute necessity. This habit of an occasional house cleaning will not do for those who hope for either pleasure or profit from their fowls. No one ever has or ever will succeed with poultry unless they keep their hen houses and surroundings in good sanitary condition. No prize winner ever came from ill-kept pens, nor profit from the egg production of poorly cared for or neglected hens. A broiler plant located in a damp place that is allowed to become dirty will scarcely need the assistance of an expert killer to execute the stock; they will die of murder at the hands of those who might have saved them with proper care. Why people cannot learn to keep their fowls and their surroundings in proper condition no one can tell.

Food and water.—There is no problem connected with the rearing of poultry that will bear equal consideration with the question of when, what, and how much to feed. If we admit the laying of eggs out of the natural brooding season to be an artificial condition, we have more than natural demands to supply; and while the best methods of feeding for egg production are not a part of my subject, at the same time, I will say, our high-class breeding fowls need greater attention in this line than do the market or egg producers.

Fowls kept for breeding stock should be well fed, so as to keep them in good working condition. Their diet should be composed of all kinds of grain, green food, and but little soft or mixed food, as it has a tendency to make internal fat. A little mixed food each day is good, but the tendency is always to feed too much of it. Grains, seeds, and bugs are the natural food for fowls, all of which it is their nature to dig and hunt. If we wish the best results, our breeding stock should be compelled to dig and hunt for all they have to eat. You simply kill them with kindness when you scatter food upon the floor or bare ground for them to eat. Make them dig in the straw and seek for their food.

Plenty of good fresh water should be constantly before them, day and night, during the months in which it will not freeze. During cold weather they should have water during the day, but at all times remember that an early drink of ice cold water will shiver them the same as it would yourself on a cold, raw morning. Hot water is not good for them, neither is hot food; both, or either, just a little warm on a cold day is not bad. Hot foods or hot drinks create an unnatural heat, from which they must have a reaction, both conditions very unnatural for a fowl.

Care of the Growing Chicks.—Fowls intended for exhibition stock should be fed all they can be induced to eat, within reason, from the time they are hatched until finished for the show room. Don't overfeed them or gorge them, but keep them so well cared for that their crops and gizzards will never be empty. At the same time have present a lack of fullness of crop that will induce them to hunt occasionally for bugs and seeds. The continual exercise is of great value to them. A poorly fed chick will never make an exhibition fowl of merit.

The Exhibition Fowl.—The proper handling of our stock is beyond all other conditions. Allow me to explain my meaning by citing an incident of last season. A friend had sixty eggs, all laid by five brown Leghorn hens. One-half of these were given to a man who thinks, at least, he knows how to raise high-class birds; the other half he kept at home. Each thirty eggs produced almost as many chicks as there were eggs; the result, on the owner's own town lot, eleven grand females, one male selected, the balance all killed. Out of the twenty-two reared by the other man, only one female was considered good enough to bring home, showing to what extent the growing influenced quality.

One glance of the expert's eye at a flock of growing chicks will tell him of their future. Whenever you reach the position that calls forth the statement of "I cannot grow my chicks to proper size," you may depend upon it that the fault is yours. If you cannot learn to remedy the evil, better give up the fancy fowl business, for you have the proof before you that you are not a poultryman.

To Condition our Fowls.—Good health is the secret of fine condition. All the labor that you can bestow upon a fowl in poor health will not make an exhibition fowl of merit out of him. Health and vigor are the secrets of success to a large extent. Do not coop up and cuddle your chicks to be show specimens. Thick underbrush for all day run is far better than to have them shut up in an improperly ventilated house. The longer they can roam at will over fields and in the brush the better. Such life gives them the glow of health that imparts the rich gloss to their plumage. When the time comes that they must be penned up so as to become coop wise, try and imitate nature as closely as possible in their care and feed.

to secure some of

Parker's Game Bantams

I have some choice Black Breasted Red and Duckwing Game Bantams left from the choice collection of the late A. A. Parker, that I will dispose of at reasonable prices, as these birds are of the finest blood in this country, a rare opportunity is afforded to Bantam fanciers to secure foundation stock for breeding the winners at future shows. Address,

MRS. A. A. PARKER,
Dunellen, New Jersey.

We regret that the awards of the Hagerstown Show were received too late for this issue. A full report, giving all the names of the winners, will appear in the next week's American Fancier. The show was a big one, as might be expected at this big fall function. More later.

The report and awards of the Brockton Show, which appear prominently in this week's issue, should set managers of fall fairs thinking and thinking real hard. The standard set by the management of the famous Massachusetts fair, especially in the poultry department, is the very highest and makes Brockton the leader that others must follow or they will be lost in the race for supremacy.

Mr. W. T. Lord, the well known Buff Wyandotte fancier and breeder, while on his vacation trip last week, had a narrow escape from drowning, being one of the passengers on the Albany steamer "Adirondack," which collided with the Troy steamer "Saratoga" last Friday night near Tivoli on the Hudson river. Mr. Lord was considerably jarred up, but otherwise unhurt, and when Buff Wyandottes were the subject of conversation in the American Fancier, he forgot all about his experiences the night before, and waxed enthusiastic over the showing the Buffs will make at Madison Square Garden in January. The club meet there will be a memorable one and we are of the opinion that America's best Buff Wyandottes will face the judge.

Mr. George H. Burgott, the Brown Leghorn judge and fancier, spent a few days in New York with his family last week, and made a brief call at the American Fancier office. Mr. Burgott had some interesting stories to tell regarding judging Brown Leghorns under difficulties that will make rather startling reading later on,when all the details have been collected and the facts laid bare. The Leghorn club can do some good work in handling cases where outside influence is brought to bear on a judge to help certain exhibitors. Expose the whole bunch interested in such proceedings and it will prove a warning lesson to others inclined to adopt such methods.

Mr. M. F. Wemple, manager of the Empire Cooping Co., returned from the Virginia State Fair, held at Richmond, but was not impressed with the poultry department as considered down there. "They need a real live man who understands his business and they need him badly," is the way Mr. Wemple expressed it. We hope to see Richmond in line another year with up-to-date management in the poultry department. There are many fine fanciers in Virginia, men who will be glad to help the show, if any reasonable inducement is offered them.

The Springfield Poultry and Pet Stock Association, incorporated, will hold a show at Springfield, Mass., January 7, 8, 9 and 10, 1907. Col. R. J. Hamilton has been chosen as corresponding secretary and this brings to mind the fact, it is more than a decade ago, that the Colonel was last seen or heard from in the chicken fancy. In those days past and gone, he was well-known as the Polish crank of the East and we well remember his last trip to the Hagerstown Show in the nineties, when Col. Hamilton made up a party of room-mates in the Hotel Baldwin, and enjoyed the company of some of the old guard, some of whom have passed over the great divide. Since that time we have lost sight and track of him, but knew he could not stay out of the fancy, if ever the time or opportunity came for him to have a reasonable excuse to re-enter the fledged secretary, and knowing the Colonel's hustling abilities, his show is bound to prove a lively one and many of the old-timers will be seen there when the bell rings.

Mr. R. T. Thornton, Hon. Secretary of the International Poultry and Pigeon Show, England, writes to one of our contemporaries as follows:

I have the pleasure of informing you that arrangements have been made whereby the Grand International Poultry and Pigeon show (which has been incorporated the Great National Show) will in future be held at the Crystal Palace, entirely under the management of the International Committee, who will receive entry fees and be responsible for prize money. Of course they have not undertaken any liabilities in connection with past shows at the Palace. The show will be held on November 13, 14, and 15, 1906.

We trust that fanciers will rally round us to make this show even more successful than our previous ones. We shall have the same extensive classification for poultry, while pigeons will be extremely well catered for, as there are so many pigeon clubs holding their club shows with us. We want to include rabbits, but as the time is so short rabbit fanciers must hurry up, and let me know what support we may expect from them, or there may not be time to arrange a classification for them.

We are confident that the step we have taken will meet with the approval of exhibitors generally, and we ask them to reward our efforts by giving us their unstinted support, while they can show their personal interest in the matter by becoming annual subscribers to the Grand International. I am sending a circular letter to all exhibitors at the International Show, and also at the late Palace Show, but no doubt this news will interest many of your readers."

This will not only interest English fanciers, but the feathered enthusiasts of the United States and Canada as well. The Crystal Palace Show of England is a historic one and looked upon as IT on the other side of the Atlantic. Now that the International has assumed control by dropping its own identity, confidence should reign supreme in the English fancy and the banner show on the tight little island be the result.

The addition to the title page of the American Fancier which appeared last week, is but a just recognition of the Canadian fancy. The Maple Leaf of the Dominion is a most worthy companion to the Eagle of the United States and we believe the American Fancier now covers the entire American continent.

The following paragraphs, written by a well known authority on the other side of the big pond, are worthy of careful attention by all breeders of poultry:

"There are certain rules or principles of breeding which have been ascertained to be correct by the experience of fanciers. A knowledge of these is indispensable to the beginner. During the formation of the strain these rules have to give way in some degree to the paramount object in view—namely, the establishing of a family, all the individuals of which bear a strong resemblance to a common ancestor, and are prepotent as to the points of the ancestor. Even at this early stage these principles may be frequently applied, and later on they are all-important.

"Chief amongst them are those which relate to the influence of each parent over the qualities of progeny. First as to size. Here it is universally admitted that the influence of the mother predominates. It is most important in breeding for size that the hen should be large and of a large strain. We do not for a moment suggest that a very under-sized cock or cockerel should be bred from, but a cock of medium size mated with a large hen will produce a far greater proportion of large chickens than will result from the mating of a medium size hen with a large male bird.

"A very small bird of either sex should not be bred from unless the smallness has been occasioned by late hatching or under-feeding, and the bird is of special value for some other points. If the small bird be a very late hatched one, and its blood is of special value, it had better be kept over until its second year before being used on the breeding yard. In most breeds the progeny of a bird which is small only on account of any of the above reasons will recover the full size, but in such cases special care must be taken to give the chicks every advantage of early hatching and liberal feeding.

"Just as on the one hand small size, occasioned by what may be called occasional circumstances, may be disregarded, so, on the other hand, extra large size, occasioned by forcing the growth of the birds with much meat or other such food, is of no advantage in the breeding pen. On the contrary, it has been found that these very large birds are frequently unproductive, or produce only weak and degenerate offspring. Extra large size which has been produced by natural means, is a point of merit, a distinct gain, and can, if desired, be perpetuated by in-breeding in the same manner as any other point.

"Although the hen has the most influence over the size of the progeny, the influence of the male bird is also material, and it is much better where is can be managed to breed only from large birds of each sex; but if it is necessary to breed from a small bird on one side the above rule must be followed.The breeder should never mate under-sized birds, no matter how produced, together, as this cannot fail to lead to a deterioration in the size of the strain.

"When breeding, as in the case of Bantams, for smallness, the converse plan must be adopted, and special care taken that the hen at least is as small as possible. In general structure and shape, the hen has also the most influence, but it must be remembered that this influence does not affect the cockerels amongst the progeny to such an extent as the pullets. The chickens of either sex show a tendency to inherit the properties of their ancestors of that sex, and although this tendency can be modified by the influence of the qualities of the sex, still too much must not be expected."

The following paragraphs, although "English, you know," will apply with equal force and but slight modification to American breeders of poultry:

"A well ventilated roosting place is at all times an essential in successful poultry keeping, and perhaps the evils attending the bad ventilation are never more apparent than at the present and ensuing seasons, when poultry which have been confined over a dozen hours in a close, heated atmosphere, are turned out in early morn to face the wet and cold of autumn or winter, and consequently get a chill they would not experience if the roosting places were open and airy, and only sufficiently occupied to induce a healthy warmth without unduly increasing the temperature.

"Colds which quickly affect the mucous membrane and occasion discharges from the throat and nostrils, are the immediate result of overcrowded and over-heated hen roosts, when the weather outside is cold and wet; and these, if neglected, and especially if the roosting places are suffered to get into a foul, dirty state, are the precursors of a roupy purulent discharge which frequently develops into that deadly foe of poultry keepers, malignant, contagious roup, capable when once established of reproducing itself and infecting perfectly healthy stock kept under the most perfect sanitary conditions, if once an affected bird is introduced to them.

The possible consequences are so serious and losses so great that every care should be taken to see that the roosts are properly ventilated and not overcrowded, especially when old and young run together; and as with birds running at large a certain amount of exposure is unavoidable, it is well to have, failing anything better, some rough shelters put up, such as may be contrived with furze or ling, or even hedge cuttings, laid on a frame alongside a hedge where the fowls at least will be dry, and also find shelter from the cold winds.

"Poultry keepers using whole corn, wheat, barley or oats should be careful not to give up the present year's produce, or, if so, very sparingly, as all new corn is apt to derange the digestive organs. So well is this known to horse keepers that in well-appointed stables they will not permit the use of new oats at any price, preferring to pay much higher for old and seasoned ones; and what in this respect holds good for horses holds good for poultry, which even farm-yards, after once filling their crops with new grain, are long enough before they will make another hearty meal of it, picking at most but few grains at a time, as if they knew it was not a good thing for them to eat.

"In the harvest fields where the shed grain soon begins to sprout, the matter is entirely different, for then they eat freely and heartily day after day, leading to the suggestion that the process of growth renders the corn more digestible, and as a like growth is the initial stage of converting a grain into malt, it very probably is the fact that the commencement of growth in fields does affect the constituents of the grain, rendering it better adapted for food, even as malt is more digestible than barley. At any rate, those who feed upon new grain should do so very sparingly, or otherwise sow it and let it begin to grow."

EAGERLY LOOKED FOR.

Editor American Fancier:

Your accounts of the races from the different districts are improving. If you keep it up, The American Fancier will be as eagerly looked for during the racing season as it is during the fall and winter show season.

COMB DISEASE.

All large-combed fowls are liable more or less to this disease, although not nearly to the same extent as the Spanish. While the Spanish will lose nearly the whole of their comb before they die, other varieties seldom lose more than the outer skin and the points of the spikes.

Black rot, as the disease is sometimes called, is associated with congestion of the liver and disappears when that organ resumes its ordinary functions, and therefore it would appear to be one of the symptoms, and a most important one, of that disease.

In the affected fowl the spikes of the comb first became congested and then black, the black gradually extending downward until, in some instances, nearly the whole of the comb becomes involved before the fowl dies, the comb itself dying from the outside inwards. There is generally more or less diarrhoea present, and the droppings are fluid; first of a dark color, but turning to yellow as the disease advances. A fowl that is attacked by this disease will stand motionless by the hour together, showing no desire for food and presenting altogether a most dejected appearance. When the disease is somewhat advanced the legs and feet become swollen and the fowl gradually pines away and dies from exhaustion.

The causes may be a chill, a close or damp house or unsuitable food.

For treatment place the fowl in a dry, well-sheltered pen,exposed to both sun and air and add to each pint of its drinking water twenty grains of chloride of ammonium. A lotion of ten grains of carbolic acid and half an ounce of water should be applied to the comb at least twice a day with a camel's hair brush. The following tonic will be found very serviceable in this and other diseases, but it should not be given at the same time as the chloride of ammonium.

Place a pound of loaf sugar in an iron vessel without any water and burn it until of a very dark brown color; then stir in one-fourth of an ounce of sulphate of magnesia (Epsom salts) four ounces of sulphate of soda (Glauber salts) and one-half ounces chloride of sodium (common salt) and sufficient water to make one quart.

One tablespoonful of this tonic to be added to each pint of the sick fowl's drinking water. When fowls are not ill, if given half strength it will cause an increase in the yield of eggs owing to its stimulating the digestive system. It may be given to breeding as well as to laying stock with advantage; while hot spicy condiments must be avoided.

While suffering from this disease fowls should be fed sparingly upon soft nourishing food. Give plenty of green food, such as onion tops, onions or cabbage cut up into very small pieces. Mustard, cress and rape are each very suitable, but the best of all are dandelion tops, which should always be given when they can be procured.

CORRECTIONS IN POUGHKEEPSIE AWARDS.

In your October 13th issue, there seems to be a mistake in the awards of Young Pekin Drake. I believe I am correct in saying that my bird took first prize, it being the same one that won first at Westchester County and was awarded first by Mr. Bean at Poughkeepsie.

Hoping to be set right in this, I am, Yours very truly,

G. R. FODDY,

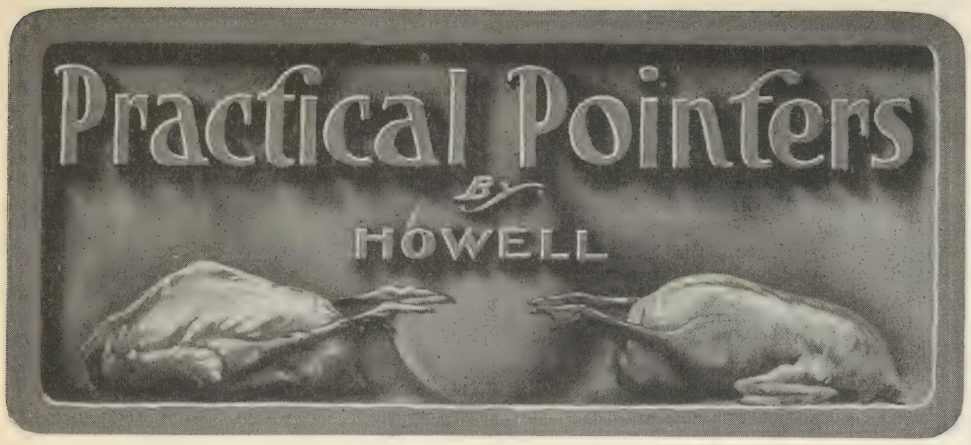
COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.



We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

It pays to do a thing well. We have in this neighborhood a breeder of fancy cattle, who a couple of years since conceived the idea of holding annual sales of his stock. Since the last sale and up to the present time he has been buying, rearing and caring for his stock with the idea of attracting the best class of buyers, for this extra trouble his stock sold last week under the hammer for a cool five thousand dollars, an average of one hundred dollars each, all ages.

Just so in the poultry business. The care and attention given, the outside surroundings possibly, seem to be of as much importance in producing good results as the quality of the stock used to breed from.

One may use ordinary or even fair breeders, and find a great improvement in the young stock. When this is the case the breeder feels encouraged, even enthusiastic, and will try for for even better results each succeeding year.

On the other hand, when one starts with the greatest prize winners money can buy, and the progeny drops in quality down to the lowest and poorest possible point, his enthusiasm will ebb accordingly.

A local authority who labors under the banner of the Rural New-Yorker, after confessing to the fact that on certain days last winter he did not get an egg from fourteen hundred hens, scattered about in small flocks, is now going to try the large flock idea.

The trouble is not with the house primarily, but with the breed and the method of feeding.

As we have said many times, the good, solid, old-fashion hen with the coat of feathers is the hen to lay eggs in the fall and winter.

Personally we feel rather on the cheap order ourselves. One flock of big fat cross-bred hens were sold to make room for a big purchase of Leghorns, the only exceptions being a few thin in flesh or being used for brooding hens. Those exceptions are now big and fat themselves, and laying nearly every day, while the later purchase is leading an idle existence.

I figure out that it is just costing me a dollar a day in eggs for this month and next by making the change.

The moral is, when you have a good thing, hang onto it.

We are busy preparing for winter. First each house is cleaned and three inches of sharp sand and gravel is scattered evenly over the floor; next a layer of leaves or any scratching material is scattered over it. This gives a home-like appearance to the premises, and looks inviting in the early morning and on bleak, cold days.

Home grown grain for the fowls cuts the feed bill in half. When one considers the price, it is strange more attention is not paid to its production where land is available.

The Eastern Stockman, Poultry and Dairyman is cursed by the ease with which he can fill his feed bins from the out-put of the great West.

Two hundred pair of market chickens would not pay for a good sized yearly feed cost. Growing the chicks entails a great deal more attention and labor than would growing the grain, yet ninety-nine out of a hundred would choose the chicken end.

An authority on chicken matters had this question asked him: "My chicks' eyes seem to become glued together. What is the cause?"

To which he replied: "Am unable to state positively what is the trouble, at any rate they are worthless, etc., etc."

Now supposing a fellow pays three dollars for a setting of eggs, or even one dollar; he hatches a few chicks and a sudden change of wind and weather gives them a cold and their eyes close. Does he consider them worthless? Nit, he will hustle his best to save them.

A little grease on the eyelid, which closes from inflammation, and any roup cure or cough remedy, will save them in nearly every case.

CORRECTION IN NEW YORK STATE FAIR AWARDS.

We notice in your report of the New York State Fair, you have misplaced credit for first Buff Cochin Bantam cock, first Black hen, and first Golden Sebright hen. These honors were awarded us.

Very truly yours,

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 10,092 cases. Trading under the call was of fair activity. Sales in detail were 200 cases of western firsts, f g spot at 26c. One hundred cases of the same quality was taken at 26¾c, buyer's option 10 days. The position of the highest grades of fresh is fully as firm as it was at the close of last week, but prices show no advance on the several varieties. Collections of fresh are falling off rapidly, especially in the westerly and northerly sections, but some very good lots are coming from southwestern points. Western firsts are selling at 25@25½c, occasionally 26c. Fair to good reach 23@24c. Refrigerator eggs are freely offered. Brokers claim that very few samples submitted pass the inspection of buyers. Finest April packed are firmly held at 23@23½c. Lower qualities are obtained at 20@22c.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 1,346 pkgs. Receivers were obliged to carry over considerable stock from last week, and with advices of liberal quantities due this week, the market at the opening showed signs of weakness on both chickens and fowls. As buyers failed to take hold freely, prices were reduced ½c on fowls, and 1c on chickens. Soft meated chickens and small broilers were in small proportion in the offerings, but medium sizes of average quality simply glutted the market, nearly all kinds were more or less weak. Turkeys, ducks and geese were quiet at late prices. Squabs of large size ruled firm, finest white weighing 9@10 lbs. to the dozen, reaching $3.75.

Below will be found the awards at the Blue Grass Fair held at Lexington, Ky., recently. This was the largest show held in the South, 1,200 poultry and 300 pigeon entries. Judge T. E. Orr had his hands full placing the ribbons. Over $1,800 were hung up as premiums. Wet weather played havoc with the attendance, but the Blue Grass Poultry Association, under whose auspices the show was held, is out with the promise of a larger proposition next year.

STUNTED CHICKS.

The chicks that have not grown to a fair size by this time will become stunted as soon as cold weather approaches. They will not gain half a pound each until spring, but will eat as much as some of the larger fowls, and though they begin to grow again in the spring, yet they will never attain the size characteristic of the breed to which they belong. Nature seems to cease all growth in order to enable the chick simply to sustain itself, though there are exceptions where the chicks receive extra attention and plenty of warmth. The safer mode is to dispose of them rather than to retain, as they will entail loss.—P. H. Jacobs.

ROYAL STRAIN WHITE WYANDOTTES

1st and 3d Cock; 1st, 2d, 3d Cockerel; 1st Hen; 1st and 2d Pullet; 1st Breeding Pen (old); 1st Breeding Pen (young).

This is the only time in the history of the show that any exhibitor ever won 6 firsts in White Wyandottes, and my victory is all the greater owing to the fact that these winners are of my own breeding. A grand lot of stock for sale of the same breeding as the winners. Prices reasonable. Address:

Admirers of modern pigeon lofts will, no doubt, be pleased to see the half-tone on our title page of Mr. A. E. Robst's lofts, located at Rutherford, N. J.

These artistic lofts were designed and erected by the owner, combining architectural simplicity, convenience and most of all, a good home for good birds.

The flying or exercising cage being the feature covering in all 30 feet by 35 feet. The central loft was originally built with fly 20 feet high, later extensions were added at either side, all connected, resulting in the present quarters. The floors of flys are cemented and drained, perches are provided at end and sides, flys extend over the roofs of lofts, permitting the use of the roofs and giving the birds a clear space throughout. Water is supplied by pipe connection. All floors of lofts are from 2 to 3 feet above the ground, foundations are of cement. Clean gritty sand is supplied weekly on all loft floors. Helmets and Hollanders, plain and crested, in all colors exclusively, are bred here, accommodating about 100 pair.

Modern Helmets.

Helmets, as recently shown in Madison Square Garden, differ materially from the birds described by some authors. They are decidedly not Tumblers nor common Dover house pigeons, but a variety by itself, well bred and worthy of notice.

Helmets are bred both plain and crested. The head is well proportioned with a medium sized beak inclined to be thick at the base, beak wattle fine and white, in blacks and blues it is permissable to have the upper mandible of dark color; the eyes are white or pearl (bird should be cutt for bull eye, not disqualified), the crest is of the shell type, runs from ear to ear and prominent, the legs clean from hock down and bright red. The markings in both varieties are alike, in plain birds the cap (helmet) runs on a straight line with beak and eye to back of head; in crested variety it stops at crest, (crest must be clear white); the tail should be of same color as the helmet color, starting at vent.

The standard colors are red, black, blue and yellow, tail bar in blues.

The carriage should be upright and bold and birds should not be large and coarse.

Owing to their peculiar marking they draw much attention at exhibitions, are tame and sociable.

* * * * *

Modern Hollanders.

This variety, according to recent exhibits, clearly belongs to the tumbler class, probably originating from the ancient German Tumblers.

Their shape and style is similiar to a long faced Tumbler. The beak is white or flesh color and in a straight line from point to top of head. They are bred in all solid colors and the tail should be entirely white, that being the main feature.

This variety is also bred with shell crests, which should extend from ear to ear and lay as close as possible to the head. Blacks are most valuable, being more difficult to get good beak (white) and tail.

Pouters, a variety which a few years ago were found in goodly numbers at all exhibitions, at present are practically dead, except probably the Club meet. The Pouter Club has not as yet decided where to meet. It seems strange the only show that can bring out an entry of these "King o' doos" is the annual meet. New York, the battle ground of many a grand display, has been sadly supported during the past few years, and if something is not done to remedy this, the classification will be reduced.

Madison Square Garden, the Crystal Palace of America, Pouters one of the foremost varieties (once upon a time) with only a class or two. How sad this will be, but it will happen if the Pouter fanciers will not support the exhibition.

Another fancier has joined the army of Pigeon cranks in the state of New Jersey. Dr. L. H. Jones, the Pigmy Pouter specialist, has moved to the spotless town of Montclair, the home of Mr. H. V. Crawford, secretary of the New York Show, who, by the way, is running for Mayor of this town of many churches and few cafes.

The Brockton Fair, Oct. 2-6, brought out the largest and best display of pigeons yet seen. Housed and penned in the proper up-to-date method, the only feature needed was the catalogue, to make the Brockton equal to any winter exhibition. Mr. Ingram was down to judge some varieties, but failed to put in his appearance. Messrs. Gorse and Forbes handled his classes.

Dragoons, although not so plentiful as we would like to see, were of extra fine quality, shown by the gentlemen exhibiting in these classes. Pigmy Pouters were indeed a strong lot, birds fit to hold their own at any show. The Brookline Lofts, capturing the most of the blues.

Homers were out in goodly numbers and contained a really first class lot.

The awards in these classes caused quite a little dissatisfaction among the exhibitors.

Turbits showed unusual strength. This we are glad to see, a variety of beauty indeed a task to breed; a really first class specimen is gaining in popularity.

Fifty-one turbits at an early show is certainly encouraging. The quality was good and the awards well distributed. Messrs. Trombly, Feather, Ashley, Burke & Ryan, Sparrow, and Opecher lofts were among the winning exhibitors.

Fantails a good class with a few really first class specimens, but not shown in the proper condition that would entitle them for premium honors at the larger winter shows.

In all Brockton was easily ahead of any of the early exhibitions, and has a great advantage for the next show, as they have successfully run an ideal show, and this will be remembered by many when their premium lists are mailed for the 1907 entries.

* * * * *

The results of the voting for officers of the Swallow Club were: A. Eckert, Rocheseter, N. Y., president; A. Samuels, Buffalo, N. Y., vice-president; L. A. Jansen, Milwaukee, Wis., secretary. The west seems entitled to the next annual meet of the Club, as Rochester had it last season.

* * * * *

The Dragoon Club will probably meet again this year at Madison Square Garden and will show a great collection of this variety. Mr. Kempton of Philadelphia is, we understand, a very probable candidate for judge.

Sept. 28th, 1906.

Editor American Fancier, New York City.

Dear Sir:—The fantail judges should consider, in judging the winter shows, the innate quality of the bird as it naturally is. A bird whose owner is on hand to see that every feather is in place, that travel soil is removed and that the tail is well laced, often shows up better than a bird which is really finer but which came from a great distance and has no one to look after it. Of course appearance, cleanliness, perfect feather, etc., should have its proper place in the judging, but after picking up one of my birds and lacing his tail, smoothing out every feather, etc., I see how much better he shows up and realize that he will have little chance against poorer birds after his 1,500 mile journey. Unless these points are considered the nearby exhibitor has every advantage of the one from afar, if the latter can not attend.

I am inclined to think that the winning birds this year will be, in view of the airing of opinions, the small type instead of the big ones like last season.

Yours truly,
COLEMAN YOUNG.

BLACK SPANISH FACES.

To keep Spauish fowls' faces free from the brown eruptions to which they are subject is the greatest difficulty we fanciers have to encounter.

Dryness of the face is, in fact, a very great point, and the dusting of a little violet powder, or, what is much better, finely powdered oxide of zinc, between the folds is of much advantage.

The advantage of the zinc is that it never clogs or cokes with the moisture of the skin, as violet powder is apt to do. I defy any man to keep old Spanish fowls' faces in condition for any length of time, especially in Summer, unless he occasionally washes and powders the face. I have always treated my birds in the following manner before sending them to a show: After washing the face and lobes in warm water I dry them as much as possible on a soft cloth, after which I dust on a little oxide of zinc, then blow off all the loose powder. Since I have done this have had hardly any trouble with the faces going wrong.

WE WANT NAMES

We want YOU to send us the names and addresses of from ten to twenty-five persons living in the United States, each one having twenty-five hens or more. You can send us the names from any number of different postoffices. If you will send us these names we will send you TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES FREE. These pictures are reproductions of the most celebrated paintings in the world, and they are of high quality, and we know that you will be pleased and delighted with them; no pictures will be given for a list of less than ten names.

We want to send a free sample copy of a special issue of the HOME MONTHLY (The National Poultry Journal), to a lot of poultry raisers who are not now taking our paper and for that reason we want these names.

Send us immediately a list of at least ten poultry raisers and we will mail you, postpaid, ABSOLUTELY FREE, TWO REPRODUCTIONS OF THE WORLD'S FAMOUS PICTURES, beautiful colors, size 15x20 inches. Address: THE HOME MONTHLY, 20 North William St., New York.

ROYAL STRAIN WHITE WYANDOTTES

1st and 3d Cock; 1st, 2d, 3d Cockerel; 1st Hen; 1st and 2d Pullet; 1st Breeding Pen (old); 1st Breeding Pen (young).

This is the only time in the history of the show that any exhibitor ever won 6 firsts in White Wyandottes, and my victory is all the greater owing to the fact that these winners are of my own breeding. A grand lot of stock for sale of the same breeding as the winners. Prices reasonable. Address:

THE HAGERSTOWN SHOW

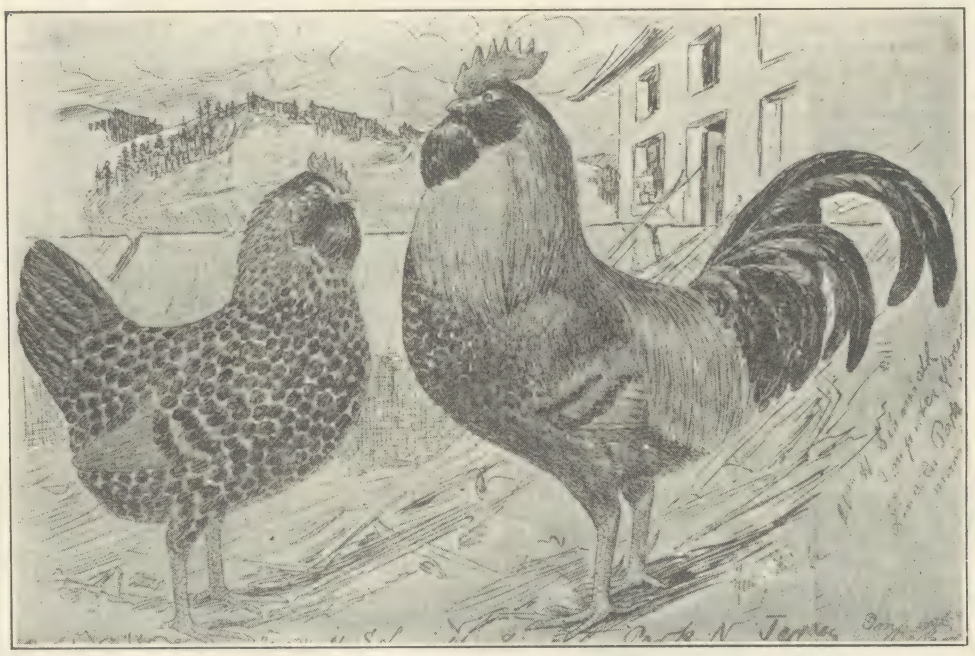
The Hagerstown Show is bigger than ever is the way everybody expressed himself or herself, when we reached the famous old city in western Maryland on Tuesday morning, October the ninth, in the year nineteen hundred and six.

It was the same old pilgrimage to the shrine of a departed and beloved old comrade, John L. Cost, dead but never forgotten.



We regret that Senator D. A. Nichols and Sir Frederick Crangle could not join the party that left for Hagerstown Monday night. They—the two old standbys—left early in the morning for New York in order to reach the scene of battle in time for a long rest, prior to the opening up of hostilities the next day in the judging ring.

In the party that went through during the night were: W. J. Stanton, pigeon, cavy and pet stock judge without a peer; C. P. Nettleton, Light Brahma fancier and old comrade of "John L. S."; Arthur O. Schilling, America's coming live stock artist; George W. Weed, representative of the American Fancier; Robert Daman, secretary of the Mineola Fair and enthusiastic breeder of Rhode Island Reds and the writer.

The trip was enjoyable and everybody got a rest for the "old Pennsy" is a railroad that provides comfort for sleepers. And we may add that it is the first time in William J. Stanton's life that he nearly slept all the way to his destination. There was no chance for an argument and ably the comforts of home provided, so "Little Wilhelm" subsided and enjoyed a "Weed' and "Schilling' 'as room-mates.

The usual crowd at the hotel was found and the proprietor did not fail to take advantage of the "financial state of the Peruvians" and just let out a few wraps to see what he could do. He did ask George Howard,Thomas McGrew, W. C. Denny and a few others. But that is another story and one not calculated to interest readers of poultry. It was principally a problem that would attract frenzied financiers. As to the show of poultry it was as big as ever and perhaps bigger in some classes, notably Waterfowl. Mr. Crangle remarked the latter were more numerous than at the World's Fair in St. Louis and we are of the opinion that "Sir Frederick" was right in his decision. He judged the web-footed ladies and gentlemen and had to do a number of mental stunts to get the decisions upon the right birds. We have always considered Mr. Crangle a most competent judge on Waterfowl, especially on the rarer varieties. He is also very much at home on Turkeys, and when it comes to Geese, he is the star boarder. Judge Crangle had hard classes to judge and we believe he did his work with strict regard to the requirements of the Standard. There were 385 entries in Waterfowl. Another judge who had his nose on the grindstone was the Hon. D. A. Nichols. His classes in Light Brahmas, Cochine and Ornamental Bantams were so strong that his best efforts were necessary to get a line on the winners. He got the line all right, although handicapped by poor light and cooping. We had the pleasure of assisting him in judging the Light Brahmas and if there ever was a finer bunch of these beautiful birds exhibited at Hagerstown, we fail to recollect the time—and we have been at the old show some sixteen years.

The Memorial cup in honor of John L. Cost was the magnet that drew these fine Light Brahmas to Hagerstown. Sorry there were not more, but what there was, made all good Light Brahmas fanciers feel good. First hen and pullet were stars in type and fine pencilling and color. But there was not a poor bird in the lot, male or female. The Buff Cochins were beauties and should be seen at New York and Boston. Partridge Cochins also were up in quality. Langshans were fine. In fact it was the best Asiatic show of the season in many respects.

THURINGIA FOWL.

The American classes of course commanded the center of the stage and were up to the usual high standard at this show in most instances. But the falling off in Barred Rocks was very noticeable. We remember years ago when these classes were the warmest in the show. Competition and rivalry was very keen and many crack birds were cooped in Rock alley. This year the entries were small and the competition very much restricted to a few winners of high quality. Mr. McClave who handled the Rock classes, except Buffs, did not have to spend very much time judging them. The Buffs on the contrary, were fully up to the standard of first class shows and contained many excellent birds, not only among the winners, but in those out of the classes as being very fair, but thinks the Minorcas were simply immense. They certainly made a fine showing.

Ornamental Bantams, a great lot in quality and quantity, but not well shown in the coops provided. Partridge Cochin Bantams were especially strong, thirteen cocks competing in the open class. It was the finest show of this variety we have seen anywhere.

Wyandottes, very strong all along the line, especially whites, the winning old birds being stronger than expected, notably first cock and hen, the latter a regular little beauty in type and color. Cockerels and pullets very good and pens the best we ever saw at Hagerstown. There were just nine of them and no poor birds in any one of them. First pen of chicks beat a rather fine pen of old fowl. It was youth vs. old age.

Buff Wyandottes, a very likely looking lot, with plenty of quality in the winners. Badly classified, however. The same might be said of Silver Wyandottes. There were several lots of splendid birds scattered in several aisles and it made judging and examining anything but satisfactory to judge and visitor. Why birds should be scattered in such a manner is not clearly apparent to us, as there is plenty of coop room and ample time to arrange exhibits. If it had not been for the veteran Geo. S. Chantz, who has been twenty-four years a helper in the poultry department, and our volunteer assistant, Mr. Warner of Hamilton, Va., we would not have been able to find some entries.

In Silver Wyandottes the first hen, cock and first pullet stood out in bold relief. They had type and lacing.

Golden Wyandottes averaged well in quality. Blacks the best we had seen this season, notably winning first and second hens.

Partridge Wyandottes, a very strong and good lot, notably first cock and hen, both up to the highest notch in quality. Silver Pencilled, good in quality. Columbians numerous and better in some classes than at most shows, the first cock, hen, pullet and pen being the cream of the class.

Brown Leghorns, a very beautiful display of the most attractive variety in the Leghorn tribe. It was a pleasure to handle such birds, no culls, but so many clean cut specimens of high merit that it made an old Leghorn fancier feel good to look at them. Cocks, not in best feather, but first won easily, repeating his New York winning of last year. In color and type he is a Leghorn. The winning cockerels, one, two, three, were cut out of the same mold, and had color head points and type stamped everywhere. The hens and pullets were as fine as we ever saw at any show. The soft brown color of the first hen, minus shafting and brickiness, the rich salmon breast, the good head lobes and small, evenly serrated comb and sound, yellow legs, make her a star among a collection of stars. And there were pullets of the same kind. The Rose Combs were nearly as strong and as good in quality as can be found at any show, first cock, cockerel, hen and pullet vieing with the Single combs for the honors in color and type.

Two very strong classes in the show were Indian Games and Sumatras, some of the latter being about as good as we have seen in sometime, while the former had plenty of quality, and it looks as if they were coming to the front again.

The annual parade and banquet occurred Wednesday evening and was as successful as in past years; in fact we never saw a larger gathering at the festive board of the Hotel Hamilton, than this trip. Not only the poultrymen but the other live stock fanciers attended. Senator Betts, superintendent of poultry, and Frank Spohr, his assistant, entertained the visiting fanciers royally. Mr. T. F. McGrew acted as toastmaster and "filled the bill," as he always does on such occasions. The awards are:

WEED AT HAGERSTOWN.

The great Poultry exhibit of 1906 held at Hagerstown, Md., has become a matter of history, and no exhibit that I ever attended has convinced me of a few certain abuses connected with our large Fall Fairs, of which I will speak later, as this one did.

That the Hagerstown Exhibit was a success from every point of view has got to be questioned. First, there was no way of knowing who owned the birds, as no catalogue was issued, and no cards with owners' names were placed except by exhibitors themselves. Then again, under every or nearly every row of cages were coops of bedraggled fowl of nearly every variety, brought here by the "Wandering Willies," who knew better than to exhibit them at Hagerstown or anywhere else for that matter where there would be any competition. Half the number of fowl here would have made a much better showing, and have been much better appreciated by the visiting public.

That there were certainly some grand birds on exhibition goes without saying, and all along the line, too. Brahmas and Cochine were a grand lot, and awards placed as they should be. The Wyandottes, especially the Whites, were grand; the winners, fit to compete any place in any company. Columbian, Partridge, Black, in fact all varieties of this popular American breed were represented with some grand specimens. Leghorns and Minorcas were fine. In Brown Leghorns, were some of the grandest specimens I ever saw on exhibition. Games, in Indians, Sumatras, and Whites, were a grand lot. Bantams galore, and the largest exhibit of Waterfowl seen for some time. Incubators and brooders, a fine exhibit, while E. W. Miller had a fine display of Poultry foods and fixtures. James C. Coffey, better known as "Bones," was also here with the Standard Bone Mill.

George Shantz seemed to be the one on the floor to do the work, and Mr. Little in the office. Mr. Shantz informed me that this was his 24th year in this department.

Wednesday evening, there was parade and banquet night. Poultrymen and friends to the number of 150, arrayed in white caps, with hickory canes cut from South Mountain battlefield. The parade was headed by Antietam drum corps. After the parade they gathered at the Hotel Hamilton, and sat down to a fine spread, first listening to the opening remarks of Senator B. A. Betts, who is Superintendent of the poultry department. He was followed by State Attorney J. A. Mason, who made the address of welcome. After heartily enjoying the fine collation, George Howard rose and informed the company present how to tell the sex of a pigeon, and right in line with that vein of thought introduced T. F. McGrew as toastmaster of the evening. Mr. McGrew informed the company that he thought a prize won reflected as much honor on the receiver if he had borrowed, bought, or stolen the bird as it would if he had bred it. (Hearty applause from the Hucksters present). After which Mr. George Ewald spoke of the Pigean, Mr. Sherry of the Waterfowl, R. R. Slocum on what the government was intending to do for the Poultry Industry of the country. Mr. John W. Dodd gave a fine address, and Miller Purvis gave a good talk on poultry interests in general. Among the Fanciers that came to see the show, were August D. Arnold, Howard Davis, Engene Sites, Arthur Shilling, D. Lambert, Louis Graham and others.

In the very near future, I intend to give an article on the Huckster, some of the good and also some of the evils as I have noticed them.

GEORGE W. WEED.

GAME FANCIERS FALL IN LINE.

Editor American Fancier:

I was much pleased to note through the Quiz Column of the "Fancier" the proposed changes to take place at the forth-coming Madison Square Show, and I honestly believe that the Fancier was the first press exponent of the new ideas. I would also like to call attention to show secretaries, that the Game and Game Bantam Club have decided to fall in line and put out some special ribbons to those shows that wish to foster the showing of Exhibition Games and Game Bantams. Secretaries can communicate with the Club Secretary, B. C. Fincke, Short Hills, N. J.

W. C. MUDGE.

Westerly, R. I., October 15, 1906.

By B. J. Hill, Associate Editor.

The writer had the pleasure of seeing a nice flock of Light Brahmas and Andalusians belonging to F. M. Frost, Greenwich, Ohio. They were well-matured, and good specimens of both varieties were plentiful.

Possibly the largest flock of R. C. Brown Leghorns in Ohio can be found at Ashley, Ohio, the property of C. A. Courter. They were a nice-colored bunch, good in back, breast and comb. Mr. Courter also breeds White Wyandottes and White Holland Turkeys.

C. C. Reed, Delaware, Ohio, the Rhode Island Red Specialty breeder, has purchased a farm on the main-pike out of Delaware, and is preparing to move all his stock on the same. The writer expects to visit this plant when completed, in the near future, and will at that time give the Fancier readers a description of the same. Mr. Reed reports business the past year as good, and expects to be able to handle trade to better advantage on his new location.

WHITE WYANDOTTE HEN.

Ira C. Keller, Prospect, Ohio, is building a mill on his Brookside Farm, and hereafter will make all his own ground feed, including clover meal.

The Akron, Ohio, Fair this year had the largest poultry exhibit in the state. Nearly 2500 birds, being mostly way up in quality. The success of this show is due to the efforts of Julius Frank, Chas. McClave, New London, Ohio, and Quillhurst Farm, Elyria, Ohio, also W. V. Evans had big strings, while the balance of the show consisted of small exhibits. P. E. McConnaughy, Todi, Ohio, showed a nice bunch of White Rocks, one pullet having a head that was pronounced as ideal by every one seeing her. P. W. Gillman, of Rittman, showed a nice lot of Buff and Black Orpingtons, and Partridge Wyandottes. Acme Poultry Yards, Akron, Ohio, made a clean sweep in S. C. White Leghorns.

A PECULIAR COINCIDENCE.

Mr. E. Gibson of Rutherford, N. J., reports that he set a Buff Rock hen on thirteen eggs and during the time the bird was sitting it laid two eggs. The hen didn't leave its nest until a total of twenty-two chicks were hatched. This statement is vouched for by a number of fanciers.

The illustration on our title page is a fine likeness of a most excellent White Plymouth Rock. It is made from a photograph and shows the bird as it is. Having handled this hen at White Plains last month, where she won first as easily as she did at the Madison Square Garden last winter, we can truthfully say that in the flesh she is even better looking than in the picture. A model in type with low five-pointed comb, rich yellow legs, and beak, grand size, and pure white in plumage, she is the ideal White Plymouth Rock hen of the year. Mr. F. H. Davey, manager of Greystone Poultry Yards, Yonkers, New York, deserves great credit for conditioning, handling and showing this bird.

The illustration on page three of this issue represents a pair of Thuringia Fowl owned by Mr. Schmidt of Lincoln Park, New Jersey. They were imported from Germany, the land of their birth, and where they are highly esteemed for their practical qualities.

Mr. B. C. Fincke, proprietor of Short Hills Poultry Farm, Short Hills, New Jersey, writes: "Taken presumably by mistake at Poughkeepsie, one Birchen Bantam hen, as one was left in her place which we now have, would be pleased to send her to owner on return of our hen, or on a description being given of her." The hen lost by the above farm is a very valuable one and we referred to the matter in our comments on the Poughkeepsie show.

Mr. F. H. Davey, poultry manager of the Greystone Poultry Farm, celebrates his twentieth year as a fancier this season, and will enter the ranks of poultry judges, as will be seen by his announcement in the judges' column this week. We have known Mr. Davey ever since he started in the chicken business and watched his march onward until he has found a place where his abilities are recognized and the results he has attained have met with success. If ability, experience, integrity and sobriety count for anything, Mr. Davey should make a most able and satisfactory judge of not one, but of many varieties of fowl.

The Hagerstown Show has passed and gone. Several reports appear in this issue of the American Fancier, giving a general idea of the poultry and pigeon exhibits. The awards indicate the importance of the exhibition and the class of exhibitors.

It is always pleasant to say nice things of any show; in fact, we prefer to remain silent as a rule, when it becomes necessary to criticise harshly anything at a poultry show. We are aware of the difficulties that must be met by managers of such shows and as their work is really voluntary, with no pay attached, it would be far from generous to place blame on their shoulders, that could easily be placed on salaried officials.

It would be a grave injustice to the poultry fraternity to say that the Hagerstown Show was run as smoothly and successfully as it should have been. It was not. The fact is, the march of progress in show functions has been so great in the past few years that even great fall fairs must fall in line to keep in line.

Senator Betts, the superintendent of poultry is a gentleman who is liberal in his ideas and willing to do all in his power to improve the condition of affairs. In fact, he told us that changes should be made in the poultry building and an addition made for Waterfowl exhibits. This is a move in the right direction.

It is with pleasure that we write these few lines, viz: Thanks to Secretary Rodgers of the Brockton Show, and Mr. W. B. Atherton, Editor of the American Stock-Keeper, the American Fancier was in a position to publish the awards at Brockton in completed form last week. We appreciate the fanciers' spirit of the former and the journalistic courtesy of the latter.

That veteran fancier of the Quaker City, Mr. Jesse G. Darlington, informs us that the fanciers of Philadelphia will hold a poultry and pigeon show the first week in January, 1907. We are glad to hear this, but would it not be better to postpone the Show until later in the month? The dates selected are the same as New York, and with Wilmington, Auburn and Boston following, it would seem that the first week in February would help Philadelphia greatly in entries. We do want to see a big show in Philadelphia every year, and believe the opportunity is at hand now to make a good beginning.

Lest we forget! "Birds of a feather do flock together. This applies not only to the feathered bipeds, but to the human possessors of dual limbs, nether and otherwise, especially when the little word "do" is added to the old saw above. There is so much doing just now that before the Auburn meeting of the A. P. A. is over somebody will be done up good and plenty unless all signs fail.

Mr. August D. Arnold of Dillsburgh, Pa., enters a protest against the claims of one Mr. Morse, residing in New Hampshire. This protest appears in this issue. We have known Mr. Arnold a great many years and know him to be a man of honor and a credit to the fancy of America. That is why we publish his protest. Mr. Morse has the American privilege of replying to Mr. Arnold. The columns of the American Fancier are run on the open door policy with personalities excluded and facts invited.

Mr. W. Frank Spohr, the secretary of the poultry department, who for many years was the able right bower of "rare old" John L. Cost, the man that made Hagerstown famous on the poultry map, could not devote his time to the show as in seasons past, owing to his connection with the Western Maryland Railroad, but he did what he could to have things run smoothly. He was ably assisted by Mr. Little. But that is as far as the responsibility of both ceases. They fulfilled the clerical functions ably.

The real trouble at Hagerstown is the classification and out of date coops and poor light in the buildings. It was simply impossible in some classes to find the entries, as birds were scattered in different aisles and some placed out of sight of judge and clerks. Entries were received too late and exhibitors put their birds in a bunch wherever the floor managers told them to. There was ample coop room to classify exhibits, even if cocks, cockerels, hens and pullets did get mixed up in the shuffle now and then. But no show of the standing Hagerstown enjoys can afford to ignore modern classification, viz: All cocks in a row with hens, cockerels and pullets in each class following suit. It is only by such methods that justice can be done to exhibitors.

Catering to big strings of birds may be all right, provided the owners are compelled to follow the rules and make their entries in time. Receiving entries up to the opening day of the show is positively wrong and contrary to the rules laid down in the premium list. This has occurred at numerous shows in the past, and while not practised at Hagerstown as a rule, nevertheless late entries have been made and received. The day for mammoth shows is over; the day for shows of quality is at hand.

The coops at Hagerstown, notably the Bantam section, are not suitable for the class of birds exhibited. To see the good qualities of a fine Bantam through the heavy iron rods is a feat for an oculist of the very highest degree, to perform. No catalogue, no cards giving the names of winners are other drawbacks that hurt the reputation of a show. We believe that the management of Hagerstown will see the justice of the above criticisms and act accordingly.

A number of letters have been received, and several inquiries have been personally broached to us regarding the bonding of the treasurer of the American Poultry Association. It seems that many members of the old society are in ignorance of the financial responsibility and liability of the treasurer. There are others. In order to allay all fears and put the matter straight before the American poultrymen, we wrote to Mr. Grant M. Curtis, president of the American Poultry association requesting him to send us information on this matter and the following reply was received from him dated Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1906. "Replying to your favor of the 17th inst., a new bond in the amount of $7,500.00, bearing date October 1st, has been issued by the Fidelity and Casualty company of New York, in favor of Mr. T. E. Orr, secretary-treasurer of the American Poultry Association. The former bond was for $5,000.00. Trust the foregoing information will serve your purpose." The above should satisfy those who asked and others who will ask questions regarding the subject mentioned above.

The Springfield Fanciers' Club has been formed and will hold a score card show, December 12 to 15, at Springfield, Mass. In connection with the show, in another room of the same building, lectures by prominent men in the business will be given each night. Mr. W. R. Graves is the secretary and will look after the business end of the exhibition in a first class manner. Mr. Graves is a fancier of long experience and a gentleman of high character, as well as a first class judge of White Wyandottes.

The eleventh annual Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock show of the National Fanciers and Breeders' Association will be held in Chicago, Ill., January 23 to 30, 1907. Mr. Fred L. Kinney is the secretary.

The following letter dated, "Augusta, Ga., Sept. 27th, 1906," we publish with pleasure:

Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt, New York city.

My Dear Sir:—As you were one of Mr. A. A. Parker's best friends, don't you think we could get up a memorial in the shape of a cup to the memory of Mr. Parker? Although I never had the pleasure of meeting him personally, I learned to love him for the fairness with which he treated me in all my dealings with him. He always gave me more than I expected. Surely he has many friends ready and willing to do him honor now that his voice is forever stilled and his manly form is gone from among us. See what you can do for this worthy cause. I will take pleasure in contributing my part.

Yours truly,
W. C. CLECKLEY.

We wrote Dr. Cleckley that the Parker Memorial Cup was a fine suggestion and would immediately start to get subscribers. A number have already subscribed and Dr. Cleckley sent his contribution in a few days ago. As this cup is designed to be a gift from the friends of the late A. A. Parker, it will be well to state that all subscriptions should be sent in to the writer as soon as possible. The donors' names will be published, not the amounts. It is a question of friendship and not finance. A small contribution is as great as a large one. All we ask is to have a cup that can be competed for every year at the Madison Square Garden, that will be a handsome tribute to the memory of one of the finest men and fanciers this country has known. As Black Breasted Red Game Bantams were his favorites, it has been suggested that the cup be placed on this variety and to go to the winner who shows the best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet. Personally we would greatly prefer each contributor to this cup to give suggestions as to how it should be awarded. Let us make it worthy of the cause.

J. H. Drevenstedt

ARNOLD PROTESTS.

Editor American Fancier: As I have for many years known your paper as being one that will give all a square deal, I therefore ask you to publish the following: A party from Raymond, New Hampshire, who poses as "The largest breeder of prize winning Columbian Wyandottes in the world," while we know of only one prize his birds ever won, which was a third, and we think we are pretty well posted along this line. But what we protest against is the lying statements he is making in letters he is sending to customers (a few of which we have in our possession). He makes the statement that he sold us the first and second exhibition pens at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., 1906. This is a false and wilful lie, made to gain trade at our expense. The fact is that every bird in the first, second and fourth exhibition pens of 1906 was bred by us.

Mr. Editor, it is high time a lot of these suckers were put out of the ranks of the fancy or a lot of good people must go out. We have a lot of evidence against this man that we can produce if necessary.

AUG. D. ARNOLD.
Dillsburgh, Pa.

WINSTED GETS STATE CUP.

White Wyandotte breeders all over the state will be pleased to learn that the state cup offered by the National White Wyandotte club of America will be competed for at Winsted's poultry show December 11, 12, 13, 14, 1906. That the cup should come to Winsted is an honor that is fully appreciated by every member of the Winsted association. The club only gives one cup to a state, and while it would swell the bosom of any white Wyandotte breeder to be awarded this prize, there are many other very attractive special premiums offered on this variety by the association that will gladden the heart of every winner.

Over $330.00 in special premiums have been put up on different varieties by the Winsted association, which includes many $5.00 gold pieces. Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, Leghorns, Orpingtons and Brahmas and all the other varieties have been justly considered in the placing of special premiums, which merit the support of every loyal fancier. Premiums always paid in full—promptly, too.

Winsted can boast of one of the largest, best lighted and ventilated halls in the state for a poultry show. It is about a three minutes' walk from the station. W. R. Graves, Springfield; W. H. Card, Bristol; H. B. May, Boston, will judge the show. They are recognized as the leading men in their line by many.

Another attractive feature is the coops. The Empire Cooping Co., who have been engaged to coop the Winsted show, furnish an all-wire, sanitary, uniform coop that not only adds to the exhibit as a whole, but shows the bird at its best.

R. S. Seymour, state secretary, Winsted, Conn., will be pleased to furnish any information desired concerning the White Wyandotte club.

Entries will positively close Tuesday, Nov. 27, 1906. Send them early. Premium list now ready. If you have not received one, notify

L. C. Capewell, Sec'y.
72 Hinsdale Ave., Winsted, Conn.

BIRDS MISSING AT HAGERSTOWN.

Editor American Fancier:

When packing birds at Hagerstown Fair, owners were unable to find the following: Black Langshan cock and hen, White Leghorn cock and Pekin drake. Any information will be sent to W. F. SPOHR.
Sec'y Poultry Department, Hagerstown, Md.

Fine feathers do not make fine birds —Old adage. An Irishman just over from the "ould sod" was out hunting, and seeing a redbird shot at it. He did not see it fly away, but ran up to the tree and seeing a toad on the ground he said, with a look of disgust: "Ah, but ye's was a pratty bird before I shot the feathers off of ye's."

LIKE OLD TIMES.

To The American Fancier:

It seems like old times to get The American Fancier in its up-to-date form. This first, the others afterwards. Wishing you success, I am,

Very respectfully,
ELLIS DUNTZ.

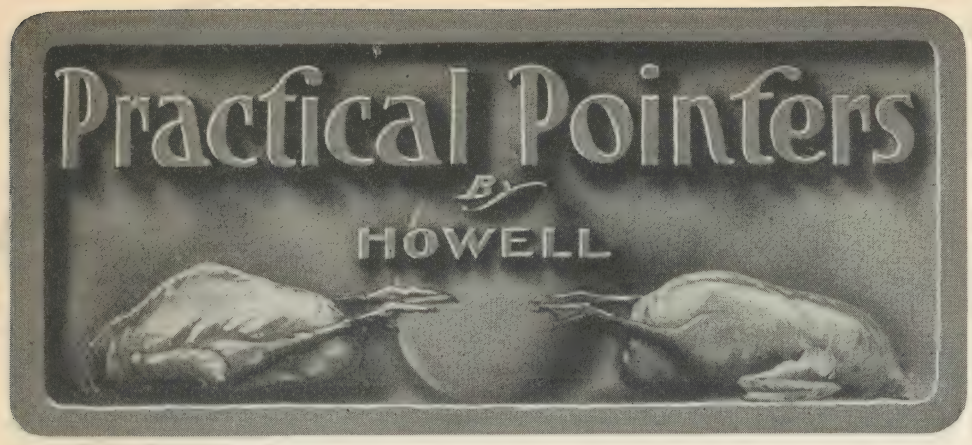
COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.



We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

About the most difficult problem which the poultry fraternity has to face, is caring for his stock during the fall.

Every day brings a different brand of weather, very trying on the fowls, and equally as bad on the handler, who tries to arrange their runs to cope with them all.

Each year I say I will start earlier and anticipate the approach of winter, but each year the press of other matters will cause a delay and the right moment passes.

When a hen moults and again reaches full plumage or a pullet becomes fully matured, she is ready to lay. If she can range with fowls similarly situated and handled for the production of eggs, the off season should be no bar to her productiveness.

I have just heard the tale of woe of a big egg producer who supplies the most famous hostelry in the city of New York.

In summer, he has too many for them, but in the fall, when the old hen will listen to no kind of argument, they send at his expense, at least two telegrams a week for more eggs.

That is why we must find a way to bridge the gap while our hens are taking a two months' vacation.

Questions and Answers.

Fancier, Crandon, Wis., writes: "Please tell me in the American Fancier how to feed blood meal."

Blood meal should be fed in the same proportion as meat or meat scrap, arrange the morning mash about like this: 2 parts wheat bran or ship, 6 parts wheat middlings, 4 parts blood meal, or 2 parts bran, 6 parts ground oats and corn, 4 parts blood meal.

The object in feeding the bran to any live stock is its valuable qualities as a laxative and great wealth of bone forming material it contains.

G. R. Todd asks: "Can you tell me if giving white birds Tincture of Iron in drinking water will have any tendency towards turning the color of the plumage? My birds are all pure white at present and as I wish them to remain so, am at sea to know what effect it may have."

As far as changing the color of the plumage is concerned, it will have no effect upon it.

You do not say what specific reason you have for diluting the water with iron. My advice is: Should your fowls be as healthy as their plumage is white, throw the iron over the back fence. A healthy fowl or a healthy person has no use for a stimulant. When they droop around, a little toning up of the system is a benefit. Scald the drinking vessels out with boiling water occasionally in lieu of a tonic.

Running in the sun will turn a white bird's plumage into straw color.

Mr. Robert B. Slocum has been appointed Government hen expert and will have charge of an experimental hen farm at Baltimore.

Many of our monthly contemporaries speak very kindly of Mr. Slocum's ability as a hen handler.

One of the first efforts he will make, will be to break up the habit of wanting to "set" by hens who heretofore have not read the government bulletins, on the amount of time they lose by this useless habit. This effort is in direct contradiction of President Roosevelt's idea expressed on race suicide.

I suppose Mr. Slocum reasons chickens can be hatched in incubators and does not fear the big stick.

I think I have struck something better for the Governmental Farm to experiment with, which I have taken from the English Feathered Life, and submit as a strikingly original new breed:

A New Breed.

From France comes tidings of a new breed, or, rather, of an old breed rediscovered, for the Rhea Americann, or Nandon, or Butcher bird, has been described by Darwin and acclimatised in Europe for forty-five years. It comes from South America, where it is sometimes called the South American ostrich, and it lays an egg equal to eight of those produced by a domesticated hen—in other words, its eggs weigh a pound, and they make, we are told, excellent omelettes. The Societe Nationale d'Acclimatation has taken the Nandon under its wing, and the members have partaken of two omelettes, one made of hen's eggs and the other of Nandans', and been unable to tell the difference. So far, so good; but when we read that the Nandon "lives upon three-halfpence a day comfortably," which sounds as though the intelligent bird received its allowance in cash and laid it out itself to the best advantage, with due regard to economy, and dietetic values, we wonder what the Nandon's yearly average is. It costs about ten times as much to keep, and its eggs are only eight times bigger than hens'. Something like a 200-egg strain of Nandons must be produced to make them profitable and popular as egg layers. As table birds they are not a success; the adults are tough and tasteless, the young birds tender, but insipid. His feathers, however, are of value, and milliners find them useful. He is very quick on his legs, and when wild can only be captured by a sort of lassoo weighted with stones; and lassoo-throwing is an accomplishment in which the ordinary poultry-keeper is woefully deficient. Also when the male goes courting he "lows like a cow." This would make him unpopular in the suburbs, which are quite noisy enough as it is. No; on reflection, the Nandon will not do, and we must stick to Orpingtons, Leghorns, and Wyandottes till something better turns up.

SPRINGFIELD FANCIERS' CLUB.

The Springfield Fanciers' Club was organized by Fanciers from Springfield and vicinity. They propose to hold a score-card show Dec. 12th to 15th in Graves' Hall on Main street, in the best location in the city.

The Empire Cooping Co. will do the coopin g and the following judges have already been engaged: T. F. McGrew of Washington, D. C., D. J. Lambert of Apponaug, R. I., A. F. Pierce of Winchester, N. H., Lester Tompkins of Concord, Mass., other judges are being considered and will be added to the list.

As there is a good lecture hall in connection with the exhibition hall, we propose to have lectures by Mr. T. F. McGrew, Mr. C. K. Graham, and others on practical and instructive subjects on the evenings of show week.

A guarantee fund has been raised and paid in to guarantee the payment of all bills and premiums will be promptly paid. Liberal cash specials in addition to the regular prizes will be offered on all breeds, and will be an inducement that will bring out exhibits of breeds not usually well represented in the average shows.

We wish to make a well balanced show that will be effective and pleasing to the average visitor. For premium lists and other information write to the secretary.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts, 4,860 cases. There were no features noted in yesterday's market that would warrant the slightest change in prices of the several varieties of fresh or held eggs. New laid eggs, suitable for best trade, ruled steady at 25@25½c. Under the call 100 cases of firsts sold for spot delivery at 25½c. This is the principal grade dealt in and represents about the best average quality now arriving. The under grade are selling slowly and in a wide range of values. There is a light supply on the spot of nne dirty eggs. The use of storage eggs is mainly from dealers' own holdings and speculative purchases are not freely reported. Aprils are generally held at 23c, but a very useful quality is offered at 22c. Inferior sell as low as 18c.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 1,326 packages. The fresh receipts were liberal, and coming on a demoralized market, such as existed last week, not the slightest improvement was made in either tone or prices. Chickens comprise the largest part of the accumulations, and average best western are freely offered at 12c. Some western dry picked, milk fed, sold down to 14c. The position of fowls was most discouraging, and about every grade suffered a decline of one-half cent per pound. The spring duck season is practically at an end, and the best lots now offered reach 17c. Geese are quiet but firm. Turkeys are arriving in a soft condition, owing to the recent wet weather, and prices are sustained with difficulty. Squabs were steady.

The best bids obtainable, up to a late hour, were 10c for chickens, 10c for fowls, and 6c for roosters. These figures were finally accepted as the settling prices. CONKEY'S ROUP CURE

It Cures Roup

The most dreaded disease of the poultry yard. Why permit the ravages to go on when the cure is so easy and sure?

It's Guaranteed

Money back cheerfully if it fails. That's the offer we've been making for years to its many thousand users; but the cure does not fail. No trouble to administer. Simply put it in the drinking water, the fowls take their own medicine.

In 50c and $1.00 packages. On sale with poultry supply dealers or druggists everywhere. Don't accept a substitute. Insist on Conkey's.

THE CONKEY BOOK of poultry diseases, price 25c, is now mailed free on receipt of the postage, 4c in stamps and names of two other poultry raisers. Invaluable to every raiser of poultry. Send for it.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J.

October 2-5.

The Mt. Holly Fair was much larger and better than it has been since its reorganization. Poultry classes were well filled and the quality was good. Coops were piled three tiers high in some classes. The management has promised another building and have it equipped with Empire coops for next year. Louis P. Graham placed the awards and gave general satisfaction.

Below are the awards:

PIGMY POUTER CLUB MEETS AT NEW YORK.

As a result of the recent election of the American Pigmy Pouter Association for place of meeting and club judge, New York was selected with but one dissenting vote, which was for Cincinnati. For club judge, Mr. A. D. Brown of Washington, D. C., was chosen. This is a very popular combination and will assure a big entry.

The members have without exception enjoyed a prosperous breeding season and I hear there are to be some wonders in the walking pen. I have seen some of them and they are worth anybody's gate money to see. If there are any better, we have the English Pouter at evens for station and, consequently, beaten, for that is the only thing they have had on us of late years.

The "Annual Young Bird Cup" and "The Novice Cup"—club prizes—together with several other fine cups, cash specials, clocks, etc., will be awarded, so if any non-member breeder thinks he will have a "look in," it would be worth his while to become a member thirty days before the show, or before December 1st, 1906.

Washington will lose and New York gain a good Pigmy man and fine gentlemen, Mr. Geo. F. Stewart, who has sold his stud and will immediately leave for his new home, the New Knickerbocker Hotel. He intends to look up the N. Y. members and begin breeding as soon as he can procure a suitable location.

Respectfully,
E. C. DUFFY, Sec'y.

AMERICAN PIGEON CLUB AMENDMENTS.

The following resolutions, passed at the first three annual meetings of the club and recently put to a mail vote, are accepted and become laws of the club. The polls closed October 20th, with the largest return ever polled by the club, 92 voting. This is indeed gratifying, not only in numbers, but in the diversity of the vote and the remarks accompanying them. It shows much interest in the club's affairs and a thoughtful consideration of the points at issue. In the great majority of cases I agree with the majority, but some of the rules need the services of a repair artist. Here they are and how they are liked:

First. That the 1905 bands and in the future be enameled all around.

83 to 7.

Second. That the order of business be incorporated in the rules as follows: 1, Roll call; 2, Reading of minutes of last meeting; 3, Report of secretary-treasurer. 4 Report of committees; 5, Unfinished business; 6, New business.

91 to 0.

Third. That all judges officiating at shows held under A. P. C. rules shall be members of the club in good standing.

82 to 7.

Fourth. That said judges shall record the color, sex, kind of band, number, year, number of birds in class, number of birds in show and name of owner of each first prize bird in each and every class that he judges, on slips provided by the secretary. He shall further sign and return said slips to the secretary as soon as possible.

90 to 2.

Fifth. That no championship points shall be awarded in classes having but one entry.

67 to 22.

Sixth. That no birds bred after 1903 be allowed to compete in old bird classes hereafter which wear any band, other than the enameled bands approved by the A. P. C., or are entirely without bands.

52 to 37.

Seventh. That no birds excepting those wearing regulation size, seamless enameled bands shall be shown after the year 1908 at any show held under the rules of this club.

54 to 36.

Eighth. That a diploma be offered as a prize to the best bird of any kind wearing the band of the club, at any show sanctioned by the American Pigeon Club.

79 to 12.

Ninth. That judges who do not comply strictly with the rules of the organization in judging birds and awarding prizes shall be subjected to a fine of $5.00 and debarred from judging birds under Pigeon Club rules until such fine shall have been paid.

Respectfully,
E. C. DUFFY, Sec'y.

HAGERSTOWN, MD.

The Great Hagerstown Fair held October 9-12, 1906, was the largest display of Pigeons yet seen at this very popular and up-to-date fair. Notwithstanding the large number of entries, the quality, as a whole, was better than seen heretofore. The attendance of fanciers and exhibitors was large and the support of the public was most generous. The judging was done by Geo. Ewald of Cincinnati and W. J. Stanton of New York. The awards were all placed the first day.

LOST HOMERS FOUND.

Editor American Fancier:

After my notice in The Fancier of October 6th, that many of our lost Homers are trapped hungry and tired in the trapping box which is used on tops of fly coops of the squab houses at the present time, and the wrong these men are doing in holding birds obtained in this way, when they would be repaid many times the price of the bird's value to them by finding its owner through the columns of our papers. This notice has at least touched one man's heart who has a squab plant on the line of flight of the Minneapolis, Minn., district, and has returned an old warrior and diploma winner who came crippled to his coop the latter part of the season in a hard race. What has this squab man done for the true fancier? He has left in his mind without doubt that the breeding in this bird are on the right lines, and that youngsters from him in his cooped are looked upon for better results the coming season. This bird would have worked home had he had his liberty in time. The squab man has been well paid for his trouble and we hope more will follow his example.

HOMING NOTES.

By T. Lawton.

It was whilst chatting the other day with three practical Homing fanciers that the subject of winter feeding came under conversation, and another question, Would it be right to breed all the year round?

The question of winter feeding covers a very wide area for discussion. I think I cannot do better than make it a part of the subject of my contribution this week. A good many fanciers content that nothing equals barley as a winter food. Others use oats, whilst a general mixture and peas and beans alone form the staple food in other lofts all the year round. I have noticed birds do well if fed on barley during the winter quarter, providing it has been of good quality. I have also found them do well if fed on beans and peas, but in this case I should say earlier separations is necessary. I am not a believer in the use of any cheap mixture. The fancier who wishes to use a mixture should buy the grains required separately, see that each is of the very best, and mix them together himself.

The most nourishing food for Homing pigeons consists of maple peas and beans and tares. Real good tares are rather difficult to find, but if a good sample is possibly found, buy them up, as I know of nothing better for use in the spring. Being smaller than either peas or beans, old birds will feed their young more freely with them, but I must not go from the autumn and winter to spring. We have now the autumn before us, to be followed by the cold frost and snow of winter. Birds fed on good barley will be found to have not the same tendency to go to nest as when fed on other grain. They will also condition well and fly well at home on barley; but let me say here how very important it is that barley, if used, should be A1. The reason barley is used so much is because it lacks heating properties. If this is the case with good, sound barley, what does bad barley lack? It practically lacks everything necessary to support the life of birds, and if you feed your birds on light, thin, perished barley you are really starving them to death.

More than half the failures with old birds occur through want of proper food and attention during the non-racing season. Fanciers at this time of the year pay little or no attention to their birds, and very often I have seen fanciers simply feed and water—and that only once a day—and lock up, and perhaps the birds never get out for a fly round once a week. Confinement for racing pigeons is injurious to good health, which is essential for successful long-distance racing. I am a strong advocate against the use of barley or any other grain on the score of cheapness alone. Anything that is cheap is generally nauseous at the same time, and real good barley cannot be bought very cheap. Those who intend using barley should start introducing it by degrees. For a week or two let it be about one-fourth of the day's rations. Then increase to half, and finally give all barley.

With regard to breeding from birds of this year or continuing to rear young after the present time, I am much against it. There is no harm in letting this season's birds couple; in fact, it will often save trouble in the spring if you couple your youngsters at the back-end of the year as you intend to mate the following season. I know of many successful fanciers who adopt this plan. I think the yearlings are keener racers on account of it. Still, at the same time I am convinced that it is a mistake to let such frail creatures rear young when only six or seven months old. The strain produced when feeding is too much for them, and you will find that the new feathers are affected. Therefore, young birds should not be allowed to rear young, and this question naturally leads up to that of separation or non-separation during the winter months, but I will deal with this in my next.—Feathered World.

St. Louis Exposition—fifty-two more points than all competitors combined, including 1-2-3 on pens, R. C. Tuttle and many others competing. Rochester, 1904, the great Rhode Island Red "meet", where the Single Combs were admitted to the Standard—Silver Cup for the best exhibit of either variety, winning, with every class filled, 1-2-3 pens, 2-3 cocks, 1-3-4 hens, 1-4-5 cockerels, 3 pullet. New York, 1905—Silver Cup for best exhibit, including 1-3-4 pens, winning more points than any exhibitor of either variety, R. C. Tuttle and other breeders competing. Cincinnati, 1906, the greatest Rhode Island Red show ever held; Silver Cup for best exhibit by an exclusive Rose Comb breeder, R. C. Tuttle winning less than three-fourths as many points on the same birds that won for him in New York. I have only shown at the Big Exhibitions, and the above record has never been equaled by a breeder of either variety. Notice especially my record on pens. Others get out a few specimens, but my birds by themselves have always made a good show, and I have never shown a bird that I did not breed myself. A low price for a quick sale. F. D. Baerman, Dunellen, N. J. 674

I WON FIRST COCK AND HEN AND second cockerel and pullet at the big Chatham Show. Judge Tracey says my first hen was a hummer. If you want some like them, address, John Mackey, Hudson, N. Y. 673-675

to secure some of

Parker's Game Bantams

I have some choice Black Breasted Red and Duckwing Game Bantams left from the choice collection of the late A. A. Parker, that I will dispose of at reasonable prices, as these birds are of the finest blood in this country, a rare opportunity is afforded to Bantam fanciers to secure foundation stock for breeding the winners at future shows. ROCK HILL POULTRY FARM

[BY THE EDITOR.]

The last time we were at Rock Hill Farm was in the damp and murky days of Spring. Birds and buildings were just beginning to "show up." Everything was new, even the incubators and brooders and the hundreds of little early chicks. The manager, Mr. F. W. Cory, however, is not new, 'young as he is,' he has had a world of prodical experience in fancy poultry culture and we believe this same experience has been the greatest help to him in building up a new plant, owned and prospected by General McAlpin of Ossining, N. Y. The general wanted the best of everything and gave Mr. Cory carte blanche to go ahead and get it, which the latter did. Furthermore, no expense was spared to put in suitable buildings and runs, and as Mr. Cory remarked to us: "It was all left to him, with no interference from the owner."

Our second visit last week favorably reminded us of the latter statement. The plant was a reality, the birds a treat to look at and the manager satisfied with a hard season's work. Mr. Cory had just returned from a most successful six weeks' tour of the fall circuit, covered with blue ribbons which his stock won in the strongest competition.

We spent several hours tramping over Rock Hill Farm, and what a glorious October day it was! The sun shone warm, the woodland in its autumn garb was a dream of loveliness set in the blue sky above. About three thousand chickens found juicy pickings on the 38 acres that comprised the farm. The colony houses, some ninety, harbored the broods at night and contained well-filled hoppers of grain for the growing feathered bipeds to partake of whenever their appetite craved for the cereal foods that make the necessary finish to well-pastured birds. When one can gaze on a thousand or more white birds, Leghorns, Wyandottes and Plymouth Rocks, and not spot a yellow or brassy one in the bunch, in fact all as white as the driven snow, with rich yellow legs and bills, a fancier feels satisfied that nature at her best is the best conditioner after all, provided the blood is right.

Many curious people have asked Mr. Cory what he washed his birds with to make them look so clean and white. The fact is none of the birds shown by Rock Hill Farm this fall are acquainted with a wash tub or a bluing bag. They, like Topsy, "jest growed dat way."

It is, of course, too early yet to single out the best birds that will compete at Madison Square, but there were hundreds rambling over the green carpets of the fields, the crags and nooks of the rocks, and in the leaf covered woodlands that had the blue ribbon stamp unmistakibly, provided nothing interfered to spoil their present promise. It is not an easy proposition to select the winners for a show to be held several months later, for some birds may be raw and unfinished and show no sign of shooting into maturity, yet these same birds in a week's time will develop most rapidly and soon run into money. Old Dame Nature still has the winning hand in such cases. Artificial conditioning is often necessary with some birds, but rarely where Nature's laws have been followed closely and intelligently.

Mr. Cory is evidently a great believer in open air culture with absolute and powerful blood lines in the breeding stock to give to the progeny the stamina and quality necessary for successful results.

White Wyandottes are the leaders at Rock Hill Farm from a business standpoint. The records made by these flocks are so well-known that sales are very numerous. But Silver Pencilled Plymouth Rocks are great favorites and remarkably good sellers. The quality of their new candidates for public favor is easily seen by the illustrations of several of the winners on this page. They have the color, the type and the pencilling.

White Leghorns are in the same class with the rest as far as quality is concerned. Here we find hundreds of birds, fine in comb, lobes, with yellow legs and beaks, but white in plumage and above all, Leghorns in type.

White Homers are another speciality at Rock Hill and when the new lofts are completed there will be white squabs galore—for "they bring the price," Cory says.

We might add that several hundred White Muscovy ducks enjoy the liberal pasturage and feeding at Rock Hill. The pets are the Buff Cochin Bantams and they are as good as the best. The only thing Cory has any trouble with is the White Guineas. They defy the best methods of good poultrymen when it comes to raising them. We shall have more to say later of Rock Hill.

Editor American Fancier:

The American Plymouth Rock Club offers 56 special prizes on Barred Plymouth Rocks, consisting of two silver cups and $380 in cash, to be competed for by club members at Madison Square Garden Show, 1907. This should draw out a grand exhibit of Rocks and surely there will be "something doing" in Rock alley at the next show. H. P. Schwab is to judge the Rocks.

JUDGE LAMBERT AT RICHMOND.

Editor American Fancier:

I notice your item in reference to the Richmond Show and what Mr. Wemple said about it. Now, I am sure that Mr. S. S. Stansbury, the superintendent of poultry, did well with his department, considering the fact that this was his first attempt at it. The coops were nicely arranged and looked well, as the Empire coops always do, and the birds were classed properly, so that it was an easy matter to judge them.

I have judged a good many shows, but I never was at a fall fair where the birds were better cared for than here. I have handled a good many S. C. White Leghorns during the past 30 years, but I never saw a better class for the season than here. Thirteen breeding pens in the class, with none that I remember disqualified.

I do not think for a minute that Mr. Wemple intended to deprecate Mr. Stansbury's services, for I am sure that he (Stansbury) did well for his first attempt.

D. J. LAMBERT.

The wheat harvest cometh in the summer, the corn harvest in the autumn, but the egg harvest every day.

Had Solomon written "Take an egg now and then for thy stomach's sake" it would have been better wisdom.

The bird-of-paradise and the peafowl are noted for their beautiful plumage, but the unobtrusive hen as a revenue getter.

Young Ben Hadad asked me why a hen's skeleton was like France's Little Corporal. Of course I gave it up. "Because," said he, "it is her bony part."

THE AMERICAN POULTRY ASSOCIATION CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I—Name.

The name of this organization shall be "The American Poultry Association."

ARTICLE II—Objects.

The objects of the Association shall be the publication, revision and improvement of the American Standard of Perfection, this book being the exclusive property of the American Poultry Association; the consideration of all questions pertaining to the poultry industry of America; the promotion of the interests of poultry breeders in general and of members in particular, and the encouragement of poultry exhibitions held under the rules and regulations of this Association.

ARTICLE III—Membership.

Section 1.—The members of this Association shall consist of five classes, as follows:

(a) LIFE: Individual membership shall be for life, for which a fee of ten dollars, payable with the application, shall be charged. The applicant shall be eligible to all rights and privileges of membership immediately following his election by the Executive Board.

(b) ASSOCIATE: Any poultry association or society, organized for the purpose of holding annual poultry exhibitions, may become an associate member of this Association on payment of a fee of ten dollars, such membership to be approved by the Executive Board, and shall be entitled to one representative having one vote at meetings of this Association. Such associations or societies, on becoming associate members of the American Poultry Association, shall be amenable to its rules and regulations governing poultry associations and shows.

(c) CLUBS: Any specialty club, organized in the interests of any breed or variety of standard-bred poultry, may become a member of this association on payment of a fee of ten dollars, such membership to be approved by the Executive Board, and shall be entitled to one representative having one vote at meetings of this Association.

(d) SOCIETY: Any society, organized in the interests of poultry culture may become a member of this association on payment of a fee of ten dollars, such membership to be approved by the Executive Board, and shall be entitled to one representative, having one vote at meetings of this Association.

(e) BRANCH: Any state or province, or any district composed of any combination of adjoining states or provinces, not exceeding six in number, may be organized into one branch association, subject to the constitution and by-laws and the rules and regulations of the American Poultry Association. The membership of branch associations shall be made up of Life, Associate or Society members of the American Poultry Association. Each branch association, through its properly accredited representative, who must be a member of the branch association, shall be entitled to one vote at meetings of the American Poultry Association for each five of its members who are not present at roll call.

Section 2.—All applications for membership of classes a, b, c and d must be made in writing, be addressed to the Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poultry Association, bear the endorsement of two members of the Association and receive a majority vote of the Executive Board present and constituting a quorum. No application shall be approved unless the prescribed membership fee has been paid. Should the application fail of approval, the fee shall be returned. An application for Branch membership must state, over the signature of its secretary, the number and names of its members who are Life members of the American Poultry Association.

Section 3.—The credentials of representatives of Branch associations and of Associate, Club and Society memberships must reach the Secretary's hands before the opening roll call of meetings attended by such representatives, otherwise they shall not be entitled to take part in the proceedings as representatives.

Section 4.—The representative of any club or society must show by his credentials that said club or society has held a regularly called meeting, as provided for by its constitution and by-laws, within one year from the date of the meeting of this Association in which he seeks to take part, and a certified copy of said constitution and by-laws must have been filed with the Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poultry Association at the time of the filing of the application for membership.

Section 5—In advance of each annual meeting the Secretary-Treasurer shall drop from the roll call all members of the Association who are two years in arrears in the payment of their dues.

Section 6—Fifty per cent. of each Life, Associate or Society membership fee, coming to the Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poultry Association through any Branch Association, for membership in the American Poultry Association, shall, upon the election of the applicant, be returned to the Branch from which it came.

ARTICLE IV—Officers.

Section 1.—The officers of this Association shall be a President, a First Vice-President, a Second Vice-President, a Secretary-Treasurer, an Executive Board, a Finance Committee, a standing Revision Committee, an Election Commissioner and a Board of Review.

Section 2.—The Executive Board shall consist of the President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary-Treasurer and nine elective members, together with the Presidents of all duly accredited Branch Associations.

Section 3.—Neither the Vice-Presidents nor any two of the nine elective members of the Elective Board shall be elected from the same state or province. The nine elective members of the Executive Board shall be elected the first year after the adoption of this section, as follows: Three for the term of three years, three for the term of two years and three for the term of one year. Three members of the Executive Board shall be elected annually thereafter, each for a term of three years.

Section 4.—The Finance Committee shall consist of the President, who shall be chairman, and two other members of the Executive Board, to be chosen by the Executive Board at its annual meeting, and shall serve for one year.

Section 5.—The standing Revision Committee shall consist of three members, to be chosen by the Executive Board, to which committee all matters pertaining to Sandard revision shall be referred for attention, with or without recommendations.

ARTICLE V—Election of Officers.

Section 1.—The election of all officers of the Association shall be by mail, unless otherwise provided for by this constitution, and shall be conducted under the direction and control of the Election Commissioner, except that his final report of the results shall be verified and certified to by a Board of Review, as hereinafter provided.

Section 2.—The Election Commissioner shall be elected by a majority vote at each annual meeting of the Association. His necessary traveling and hotel bills, postage, stationery and other expenses shall be paid by the American Poultry Association.

Section 3.—Except as otherwise provided, the terms of all officers shall be for one year, and until their successors are elected and qualified. All official terms shall begin at the commencement of New Business at each annual meeting, and end at the close of Unfinished Business at the next succeeding annual meeting.

Section 4.—The traveling and hotel expenses of the President, First Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary-Treasurer and nine elective members of the Executive Committee, for attendance at all executive meetings, shall be paid by the American Poultry Association. The traveling expenses of members of the Executive Board sent by Branch Associations shall be paid by themselves or by the Branches that send them.

Section 5.—The Board of Review shall be elected by ballot at each annual meeting of the Association, from among the members present, no member of said Board to be either an officer of the Association or one of the candidates for office. The term of office of each Board of Review shall terminate at the adjournment of the meeting at which said Board is chosen.

ARTICLE VI—Duties of Officers.

Section 1.—PRESIDENT: The President shall preside at all meetings of the Association; act as chairman of the Executive Board and of the Finance Committee; countersign all checks when properly approved and when signed by the Secretary-Treasurer; appoint all committees not otherwise provided for; call special meetings of the Association or of the Executive Board within sixty days at the written request of five or more members of the Executive Board, and perform such other duties as pertain to the office.

Section 2.—VICE-PRESIDENTS: In the absence of the President, or in the event of his inability to act, the First Vice-President, or, in his absence, the Second Vice-President, shall preside in his place and perform his duties.

Section 3.—SECRETARY-TREASURER: The Secretary-Treasurer shall prepare and distribute all notices of meetings of the Association and of the Executive Board; shall keep the minutes of such meetings, and have charge of all books and papers pertaining to his office, and shall keep a correct list of the names of all members of the Association, of their places of residence and the dates of their election, a copy of which he shall furnish on request to the Election Commissioner and to the Chairman of the Board of Review.

Section 4.—He shall be the custodian of the seal of the Association, which he may use only under the direction of the Executive Board or by direct vote of the Association.

Section 5.—He shall furnish to all members a certificate of membership.

Section 6.—He shall conduct the general correspondence of the Association and have custody of the same. He shall keep on file all letters received, together with carbon or duplicate copies of all letters sent out by him, for the information of the President or Committees, and shall act as secretary of the Executive Board and prepare a report of all meetings of said Board for the information of the members of the Association.

Section 7.—He shall at the proper time furnish the Election Commissioner and Chairman of the Board of Review with lists of all officers to be elected, and full information regarding the territories from which said officers are eligible to election.

Section 8.—He shall collect all money due to the Association and be custodian of all moneys belonging to the Association, which must be deposited by him in the name of the Association in a bank or banks approved by the Finance Committee, from which money all bills of the Association shall be paid only when such bills have been approved in writing by the Finance Committee; he shall sign all checks drawn on the funds of the Association, which checks must be countersigned by the President; he shall keep the necessary books, in which shall be entered the amounts received and disbursed by him, and shall have his books, papers and accounts always open for the inspection of the Executive Board or any member thereof.

Section 9—He shall make an itemized report of the financial condition of the Association, together with a full report of all transactions, such report to be made annually to the Executive Board, covering the last expired fiscal year, which reports shall be in the hands of the Chairman of the Executive Board ten days before the date of its annual meeting.

Section 10.—He shall be custodian of and keep well insured all property belonging to the Association not otherwise provided for.

Section 11.—He shall give bond to be approved by the Finance Committee, for the faithful performance of his duties; said bond to be paid for by the Association.

Section 12.—The salary of the Secretary-Treasurer shall be fifteen hundred dollars per year, payable by check in equal monthly installments as due. The salary of his office assistant shall be ten dollars per week, payable weekly. The only other expenses allowed the Secretary-Treasurer shall be for postage, freight, telegrams, expressage and other incidental office expenditures in transacting the business of the Association and his actual expenses incurred in attending the meetings of the Association and Executive Board, and such other expenses as are authorized by the Executive Board—all of which expenses must be approved by the Finance Committee before checks covering the same can be drawn against the funds of the Association.

Section 13.—The Secretary-Treasurer shall devote his entire time and attention to his office, and the same shall be required of his office assistant.

Section 14.—Should the Secretary-Treasurer neglect his duties to the detriment of the Association, it shall be the duty of the President, or any member of the Association, to call attention to the fact, and the Executive Board, on proof of due cause, may require him to resign, declare the office vacant and forthwith appoint his successor to serve out the year. In case of the dismissal of the Secretary-Treasurer for cause, he shall receive no salary for the unexpired term for which he was elected.

Section 15.—DUTIES OF EXECUTIVE BOARD: The Executive Board shall have general control and supervision of the affairs of the Association, and shall be its official organ at all times and on all occasions.

Section 16.—It shall be its duty to safeguard the interests of the Association at all times, and especially during the intervals between the annual or special meetings, acting promptly within its legal powers.

Section 17.—It shall fill all vacancies that occur among the officers of the Association or on standing or special committees not otherwise provided for .

Section 18.—It shall hold a regular meeting once each year at the place of holding the annual meeting of the Association, said regular meeting to be convened one day in advance of said annual meeting, and shall not adjourn sine die until after the final adjournment of the annual meeting of the Association.

Section 19.—It shall meet in special session on call of the Chairman of the Board, or on written request of five or more of its members, said written request to specify the time of meeting, which shall not be less than ten nor more than sixty days later than the date of the request; said request to also specify the object or objects of the said special meeting, and the place at which the meeting is to be held.

Section 20.—It shall make a written report, in detail, at each annual meeting of the Association, through its secretary, covering its acts, such report to include reports of the Secretary-Treasurer and Finance Committee, and a report from, or regarding, each Branch Association.

Section 21.—It shall have authority to contract indebtedness in the name and interests of the Association; provided, however, that such indebtedness shall not at any time be greater than the amount of the current funds in bank.

Section 22.—It shall take official notice of any neglect of duty on the part of the Secretary-Treasurer or his assistant, and shall act of its own volition, or upon charges properly preferred by any member in the matter of such neglect of duties.

Section 23.—It shall appoint, instruct and control the Standing Committee on Revision of the American Standard of Perfection, and take the initiative in providing for a revision of the American Standard of Perfection once in five years.

Section 24.—It shall cerry out the will of the Association in the organization and promotion of Branch Associations; have control of the establishment of Branch Associations, of the division of territory and of the enforcement of the rules and regulations which govern their relations to the general association, except as otherwise provided for in this constitution.

Section 25.—It shall use its best endeavors to secure Associate Members of the Association and shall encourage the formation of specialty clubs and of poultry societies that express a desire to become members of this Association.

Section 26.—It shall provide a certificate of membership for each class of members, and require the Secretary-Treasurer to furnish members with same, properly dated and signed, and having the seal of the Association thereon.

Section 27.—It shall provide an appropriate seal or emblem, to be protected by trade-mark, registration or copyright, for use on printed matter, stationery, certificates, diplomas and medals of the Association, and to be furnished in the form of electrotypes for the use of members of the Association.

Section 28.—It shall have charge of and promptly act upon all matters pertaining to the disqualification, suspension, expulsion or restoration of members, with power to suspend, disqualify or expel any member, for cause, by a vote of three-fourths of the members present and constituting a quorum; provided, that no member shall be suspended, disqualified or expelled without formal charges and the opportunity to be heard, and that any member, thus suspended, disqualified or expelled, shall have the right to appeal to the Association at its next annual meeting, which shall be the final judge in the case. Said Board shall have the power to restore disqualified or expelled members, subject to protest from any member in good standing against restoration, in which event the case shall go before the Association, at its next annual meeting, for decision.

Section 29.—It shall arrange for licensing judges of poultry and shall have power to suspend or disqualify said judges for cause, and to revoke their licenses on order of the Association.

Section 30.—It shall enforce the rules of the Association governing the holding of poultry shows.

Section 31.—It shall co-operate with Branch Associations and Associate members in avoiding conflicts of dates in holding poultry shows and other poultry meetings.

Section 32.—It shall appoint from among its members a Committee of Three on certificates, diplomas and medals, and arrange to supply these awards of merit to branch associations and Associate members for the encouragement of exhibitors at annual poultry shows held under the rules of the American Poultry Association.

Section 33.—It shall arrange for poultry conventions in branch territories in cooperation with branch associations, and provide for an annual poultry institute to be held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the Association.

Section 34.—It shall organize and promote, through the office of the Secretary-Treasurer, a bureau of lecturers qualified to deliver addresses on poultry topics, and shall issue certificates thereto authorizing them to announce themselves as members of the American Poultry Association Bureau of Lecturers.

Section 35.—DUTIES OF FINANCE COMMITTEE: All bills and claims against the Association shall be referred to the Finance Committee, and, before payment, must be approved in writing by a majority of the committee, this majority to include the Chairman; all papers showing such approval shall be preserved by the Secretary-Treasurer and made a part of his financial report to the Executive Board at its next annual meeting.

Section 36.—The fiscal year of the Association shall close on June 30th and the Finance Committee shall audit the books and accounts of the Association in July of each year, certify to their correctness covering the last preceding fiscal year, and report its findings to the Executive Board at its next annual meeting. It shall also audit the books and accounts of the Secretary-Treasurer at such other times as the Executive Board may direct.

Section 37.—DUTIES OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON REVISION: It shall be the duty of the Standing Committee on Revision to collect such data as it may find practicable for use in each general revision of the American Standard of Perfection. To this committee shall be referred all information, suggestions and requests pertaining to changes in the text and illustrations of the Standard of Perfection.

On Saturday, October 27, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, a fine consignment of American bred fowls sailed on the good ship Minnetonka for England. Their destination is the Crystal Palace Show, England's greatest and largest exhibition of poultry, pigeons and pet stock. The illustration on our title page shows the shipment on deck of the steamer with the exception of five Bronze turkeys, which were stored away below decks. The four fanciers on the left of the picture are: Mr. Compton, steward of the State Rooms and old time English fancier, who will have personal charge of the birds on their voyage across; next to him stands Mr. T. Farrer Rockham of Spratts Patent, who did much personal work to make this shipment possible. Mr. H. M. Pockman is in the background. Mr. R. L. Hutchings at the side of his coops. We regret that Mr. Fred Huyler of Peapock Farm was so modest as to hide behind a bunch of rope and could not be caught by the camera. Mr. Orr and Mr. Bates of Oceanside Poultry Yards, were unable to be present. This excellent picture was taken by Mr. J. Albert Lewis just before the steamer sailed, the print was in the hands of the engravers Monday morning and the plate sent to the printing office Monday afternoon. This is "going some," as the popular phrase of the day would put it. Both the photographer and the Peerless Engraving Company did themselves proud in this matter.

This is the first large shipment, in fact, the pioneer consignment of poultry ever sent to an English show, if we are not mistaken. The credit for originating this broad and far-reaching venture belongs to Mr. R. L. Hutchings, who told the writer last January that American fanciers must invade Great Britain and show their birds the same as American athletes, turfmen and yachtsmen had done before them. It was a thoroughly sportsmanlike proposition and one that we expected would be accepted by many fanciers. It is true that when enthusiasm is high at the winter shows many will signify their willingness to exhibit. It is equally true, that when the bell rings in early autumn, the many are represented only by the few. The men who send birds are fanciers whose gameness cannot be questioned. They have been in the show ring many times and are willing to take chances, even on foreign soil with totally different standards to govern the decision of the judges. The Buff Plymouth Rocks of Mr. Hutchings, the White Plymouth Rocks and Bronze Turkeys of Peapack Farm, the Columbian Wyandottes of D. Lincoln Orr and the White Wyandottes of Oceanside Farm are all fine types of the American standard-bred fowl and fanciers of this country need not feel ashamed of the feathered bipeds that will represent the stars and stripes.

The entire handling and shipping of these birds is in charge of Spratts Patent, Ltd., saving the exhibitors one dollar on each bird, besides assuming the charge and care on the other side of the Atlantic, of the birds consigned to them. It was a very courteous and liberal offer this great firm of England and America made to the American fanciers who entrusted their birds to them. The true fanciers' spirit prevailed in all this international deal, and we honestly believe only the most gratifying results will be obtained. It is an opening wedge to a better understanding between Eglish and American fanciers and will lead to an annual exchange of exhibits, unless all signs fail.

Furthermore, the day of an International Standard is not so far distant, if the results expected this year are only partially realized. There should be but one type of Standardbred fowl in the world and but one Standard to govern the judges in making their awards. We have read the English Standard closely and when compared with the American Standard of Perfection, can find but very little difference in the real intent or ideals contained in these publications. It would not take ten men, five men from England and five from America, i. e., real fanciers, very long to come together and make an acceptable Standard for both countries. Men of experience know what they want and what the fanciers and progressive poultrymen want. Such men have no axes to grind, but have only the best interests of the fancy poultry at heart.

Mr. C. H. Latham, secretary of the American Barred Plymouth Rock Club, on another page of this issue announces the club specials offered at the Madison Square Garden Show, New York, next January. 380 dollars in cash and two big silver cups are inducements to Rock fanciers, if nothing else is. Fifty dollars divided among the eight best in each of the five classes; twenty-five dollars each on Champions, and a host of other good prizes, besides a handsome silk ribbon awarded on each prize should draw out many new exhibitors and birds. "Prizes will be paid right on the minute as soon as awards are made," is the way Secretary Latham puts it. Mr. Henry P. Schwab, Rochester, New York, will place the awards on Barred Plymouth Rocks at Madison Square Garden, New York.

The Tri-City Fanciers' Club of East Liverpool, Ohio, is a new organization which will hold its first annual show Christmas week. T. E. Orr will judge and Spratts Patent, Ltd., will do the cooping and feeding. Over 350 dollars in cash and silver cups are offered, besides regular premium money.

Elmira, New York, will hold a show in January. There were some fine poultry exhibitions in that old southern tier city years ago, but they died out. Now the old guard is in line again and "Chief" H. E. Benedict informs us that "Chet" Howell and other old timers have decided to hold another show and a score card show at that. We are right glad to hear of all this, even if the score card is not just what we expected in David Bennett Hill's old town. Still, our good old friends, Benedict and Howell, may have good reasons for scoring birds, and we will never hesitate to help the good work. So get in line for Elmira, "all ye sinners," as the Hon. D. A. Nichols is fond to remark. The dates at the Elmira show are January 15 to 18.

Washington, D. C., is to have a show the third week in January, 1907. The Masonic Temple has been secured and is one of the best located and desirable halls in the capital of the United States. Who the officers will be, must be left until after the meeting held this week, which also determines the make-up of the board of managers. There is no reason in the wide, wide world why Washington should not be in line every year with New York, Boston and other great shows. The opportunity is at hand and we believe the men are back of this new venture who will make a success of it.

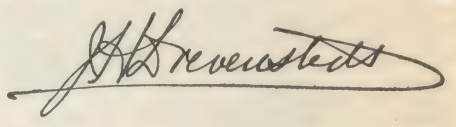
We publish the first installment of the newly proposed constitution of the American Poultry Association beginning with this issue. This will give the readers of the American Fancier an opportunity of studying the scope and possibilities of the old society when conducted under the laws framed by the committee of fourteen. For obvious reasons we decline to comment on this report of the committee of fourteen at the present time. When the members assemble at Auburn, New York, in January, there is not the slightest doubt but what every article in the Constitution and By-Laws will be subjected to a most thorough discussion. All preliminary sparring will be of little avail. The good derived from an early publication of these new laws will be in evidence when the bell rings for the members to report. They will have two months' time or more to study them.



The premium list of the second annual exhibition of the Paterson Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association has been received. The advertisement of this lively show also appears in this issue of the American Fancier. It is one of the first of the series of crack New Jersey shows to occur and promises to be a record breaker. Paterson is a live wire of a city with a hot bunch of good fanciers there and in the many closely neighboring cities, towns and villages. "Uncle Isaac" Felch, the veteran judge of the United States, Geo. E. Howell, P. A. Cook and Geo. A. Spohn, all well-known to the fanciers of the east, will place the ribbons. The show will be held at League Hall, December 5 to 8. Entries close positively November 19, 1906.

Mr. Miller Purvis, editor of that excellent monthly magazine, Poultry, spent several days in New York, and was a welcome visitor at the American Fancier office.

The "Nutmeg Twins," Senator D. A. Nichols and Postmaster William Holmes, both of Shelton, Conn., to the American Fancier by storm one afternoon last week. That pair of old line Fanciers can make life worth living to all of their kind, for they rarely talk anything but chicken when they get started. It is nearly thirty years ago that we first met this brace of chicken cranks and it may not be amiss to state that they have forgotten more than some of the younger aspirants for prominence in the judging and show world know. They bred and exhibited fowls in the eighties and ever since until a few years ago, when the calls for judging poultry came so numerously to the senator that he quit showing birds, but he still has a few choice Silver Sebrights to look after. "Billy" Holmes is very nervous because he sold out his chickens last year, and thinks he will startle the boys another season with a bunch of Golden Sebrights.

TRANSFER OF STOCK.

This certifies that I have sold to W. B. Buford, of Nicholasville, Ky., my entire string of Buff Cochin Bantams, including my World's Fair winners. Also, the string recently purchased by me from Frank W. Radford & Co., of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, including 1st cockerel at Hagerstown, 2nd pullet at Boston, 3 hens from 1st pen at N. Y. State Fair, also another excellent trio of same breed. These are the best of the well known Schilling flock and I believe now with these two flocks added this places Mr. Buford in the front rank of Buff C. Bantam breeders in this country.

Signed, W. S. HENDREN.

LAYING CONTESTS IN AMERICA.

Editor American Fancier:

The numerous egg-laying contests that have been and are being conducted in England, Australia, and New Zealand are attracting a widespread attention over the entire civilized world, and nowhere more than in the United States. Although our own country has been foremost in all other poultry ventures, she has either absolutely neglected this very important aid toward a greater poultry industry or the contests have been so conducted that poultrymen could not place confidence in the results.

During the past few years the necessity for a movement of national scope in this line has been making itself evident to American poultrymen generally and we have been approached time and again regarding taking up such a contest. Previous to this year our equipment would not permit, but we are now in a position to consider such a proposition under certain conditions, and as the time seems ripe for the undertaking, we have decided to attempt the successful carrying out of a national egg laying contest at this college.

Our idea in this move is not so much to discover the best laying variety, which we doubt the possibility of, as to create a widespread interest in all breeds competing, and especially in their profit-producing qualities. We feel that our unique position gives us a certain right to conduct such a contest, as we are situated right in the heart of "Poultrydom," and this was the first institution to take up poultry matters on a large scale. To achieve the success such an undertaking richly deserves, we must have the hearty financial support of poultrymen in general and the specialty clubs in particular. Our working plan at present is this:

The contest is to be open to one pen of eight (8) pullets of each of the standard varieties of chickens. These fowls will be furnished with one male, by their respective specialty clubs f. o. b. at Kingston, R. I., between October 1 and November 1, 1907, each pen to be accompanied by two extra fowls to substitute for fowls sick or injured during the contest. Previous to July 1, 1907, each specialty club desiring to enter the contest shall deposit with the treasurer of this institution a sum of money sufficient to provide a small colony house, temporary fencing and apparatus for housing and caring for each variety of their particular fowls. Receipted bills for the material so purchased will be returned to the secretary of the specialty club with the balance of the money. The apparatus will be the personal property of the club during this and subsequent contests of this character and may be removed by it at the close of the contest, November 1, 1908, if so desired. The college will bear all running expenses and issue the results of the contest in a bulletin upon its close. The contest will be under the direct supervision of this division, and the most expert attendants procurable will be in charge of the actual work. Methods of handling must be left to our discretion, but all pens will be treated alike, the fowls will be trap-nested throughout, and accurate records will be kept of egg yield and market value per hen, weight and fertility of eggs, weight of fowls, kind, quantity and market value of feed consumed, profit and loss per hen, length of molting and brooding periods. Fowls will be crated and placed on the cars at the close of the contest.

The initial expense to each club entering fowls will doubtless be less than $50 for each variety and express charges will cover the yearly expenses thereafter. The eggs will be the property of the college to assist in defraying the attendant expense involved in feeding and keeping the records.

Our main object in making the specialty clubs the competitors is to avoid the unpleasant consequences of necessary discrimination among would-be individual competitors, and to secure as many varieties as possible. The impossibility of using our present equipment for the contest, and our inability to use government funds to secure buildings for this purpose, renders financial aid necessary. We desire secrecy regarding the source of obtaining the fowls, meaning the breeder, to avoid the personal advertising aspect. We feel that we cannot afford to handle less than 15 varieties and must make this our minimum. If this number is not entered, the project will have to be abandoned.

Pardon, dear sir, the length of this letter as an evidence of the sincere interest of the writer. The plan outlined has the hearty endorsement of a number of leading poultrymen of America and is largely the result of their suggestions and it is subject to amendment. The rules of the contest may be slightly altered and will be given out later. We must have your hearty support to succeed, and it is a glorious opportunity to make a master stroke for your club, the variety you represent, and better poultry generally. We intend to make this an annual event and sincerely trust your associates will vote to come in with us at your next annual meeting.

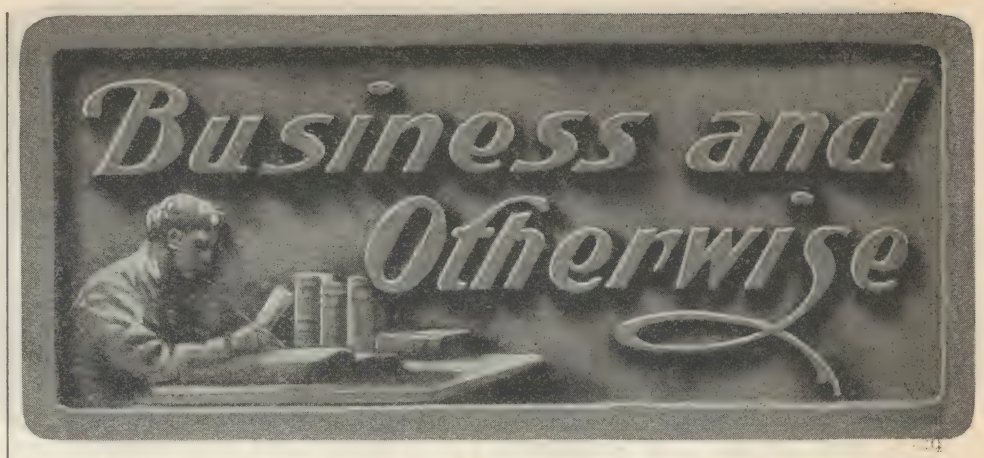
THE MILWAUKEE SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

Please note dates of this year's show of the Wisconsin Feathered Stock Association, as January 16 to 22. The 16th of January is on a Wednesday, and this day will be used to coop and arrange the entire show. Thursday and Friday, Jan. 17-19, will be used to judge and put up the rewards. The doors will not be open to the public until Saturday morning, Jan. 19th. It will not be open more than four days. We have found that the shorter the time that the stock is on exhibition, the more healthy and in better condition they remain. This pleases the exhibitor and it is him we are trying to please. All stock will be reshipped Wednesday, Jan. 23rd.



The Wisconsin Feathered Stock Association has spared nothing this year, in procuring the best possible place for the exhibition. They have rented the entire new Hippodrome Building (still under construction). This building is being erected for concerts, exhibitions, etc., and will be opened with a week's engagement of Ellery's orchestra at $1,000.00 a week. Our show opens immediately after this engagement. This will certainly be the best and finest place ever used for a poultry show in Wisconsin.

The members of the Wisconsin Feathered Stock Association have raised a $2,000.00 guarantee fund to assure the same prompt payment of premium moneys, specials, etc., as last year, when they were paid the day after the birds were judged. About 30 elegant Silver cups and tropies have been put up, besides many other fine prizes. The judges are T. E. Orr, Chas. McClave, I. C. Keller, J. N. Fraussens, C. C. Williamson.

COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.

We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

The hen men have many busy days at this season.

Winter preparation claims much attention. It is strange the many things which seem necessary to be done at once.

It is better to be a little ahead, rather than behind when the game opens.

A watchful eye on the weather clerk is also necessary. Windows have to be put in and closed against a possible chance of strong winds blowing in these.

For two days we have had a cold wind from the South blowing almost a gale. Fowls roosting directly in its path cannot but be uncomfortable, if not injured.. The great trouble with houses arranged with a roosting compartment, another for laying and still another for exercise is this, some must roost directly in front of the window. In such it is best to take no chances, but close them up with the first approach of cold night.

Select your layers by the egg basket, rather than any so-called, startling system.

The feed bucket has as much to do with prolific layers as any method of selection.

Where one has the time at disposal, testing each pen by trap nests before the breeding season arrives, will give an idea of the laying ability of each individual in the pen, and by breeding from the best layers only, great improvement can be made.

For example, I have selected a pen of tweny-five hens and pullets just in laying condition. I should not be surprised if they lay more eggs in the next two weeks than the balance of the flock, many times their number, but composed of hens in moult, half-grown pullets and other stock not in laying condition. Should this prove to be true and they had been selected by an advocate of the new system, it would be heralded as a great achievement.

Each and every breed has its place in the poultry world. It is not necessary to condemn the Leghorn because it is not a dual purpose fowl. On the other hand, it is folly for the poultryman who has a trade in both poultry and eggs to stock up with Leghorns.

When a Leghorn is dressed for market it barely sells for one-half dollar. A Rock, six months old, will bring over one dollar. Does the one eat the difference? I hardly think so; in fact I sometimes think my Bantams eat more than the large fowls.

Leghorns can be reared exclusively at a profit, when but one branch of the industry is catered to. Their function is to lay eggs and the profit lies in keeping them eternally at it.

The editor of Poultry annouces he has been unsuccessful in getting up an egg-laying contest, not enough interest being taken in the matter by the fraternity. Perhaps we are all busy trying to arrange laying contests at home.

It is gratifying to the admirers of a breed to know it has outstripped its competitors in public, but what it accomplishes in private affects the pocket of the owner.

Lice will continue to do business in late autumn as vigorously as in early summer. It is always a temptation to nail down the perches, but don't do it, lay them on two by four scantling and have both the perch and support movable, when a moment's attention will overcome the lice.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts last Saturday were 4,921 cases; for the week, 50,139; since March 1, 3, 268,086. Compared with the preceding week, the receipts show a decrease of 11,000 cases, but while this was an encouraging feature from receiver's point of view, it did not seem to create any bullish sentiment, in fact, the tone at the close was rather weak on all grades of fresh under choice quality. Prices have varied according to the quality and losses. Storage eggs, April packed, ruled about steady, but later packings were especially dull and weak.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts last Saturday were 1,369 packages; for the week, 12,449. For the past two weeks the market has been in about the worst state of demoralization known in the history of the trade for the past several years. Receipts have been enormous of grades that were in poor condition and entirely unsuitable for storage purposes. Receivers have been unable to cope with the daily arrivals and prices have slumped from day to day. Canners and speculators entered the market and secured large quantities, but event this outlet was insufficient to keep down accumulations. The best average lots were placed in refrigerators, which was the only means of saving the stock. Prices have varied so materially on the very same lots that quotations have been hard to adjust. Well-grown spring turkeys ruled steady, but there has been a wide difference in quality of late receipts. Ducks were firm. Geese quiet but steady. Large sizes of squabs have sold freely, but small birds dragged.

THE SPRINGFIELD SHOW.

The fourth annual Springfield Show by the Springfield Poultry and Pet Stock Association will be held this season on Jan. 8, 9, 10 and 11th, which will be a score card show.

The hall committee appointed for the purpose of selecting a hall, has decided upon Appollo Hall as the only one suitably lighted and large enough to hold a show of this magnitude.

Tuesday, Jan. 8th, will be a closed day until 5 p. m., to enable the judges to complete their work and get the prizes awarded.

It is not only the intention but the determination of this association to secure the best judges obtainable for the several classes. Club ribbons will be offered by a large number of the National and State Clubs. The well-known liberality of this association in giving cash and cup prizes will be enlarged upon, and in addition a greater number of special prizes will be offered than heretofore.

All birds will be handled by a member of the Association as soon as they arrive in this city, and until returned to the express company they will receive the best of care.

The association has received a large increase in membership this year, and is in a flourishing condition. The following are the officers: President, H. S. Hyde, jr.; 1st vice-president, H. C. Page; 2d vice-president, Dr. L. Clark Hill; 3d vice-president, Dr. M. E. Chapin; secretary, Col. R. J. Hamilton; recording secretary, F. W. Havens; treasurer, E. S. Evans. Executive committee, F. F. Shepherd, Walter Adams, G. J. Woods, J. H. Donegan, A. A. Sibley.

In making up our mailing list, we may not have the address of some very desirable exhibitors and the association would consider it a favor for all who desire a premium list to send their names to the secretary for a premium list to be mailed them as soon as published.

COL. R. J. HAMILTON, Sec'y.

CAT SHOW AT TORONTO.

The fourth annual Cat Show will be held by the Royal Canadian Cat Club in Broadway Hall, Toronto, on December 11, 12 and 13th. The committee having the show in charge are Mr. John G. Kent, Miss Cox, Miss Arnold, Miss Lowe and Mrs. R. W. King, with Mrs. W. C. Bell, 1040 Brunswick avenue, Toronto, as secretary.

The show will be held under Cat Fanciers' Association rules, which permits of international championships being given.

The prize lists are now in course of preparation and can be had when ready of the secretary or at the exhibition office, Toronto.

Entries will close December 6th, but in the meantime any member of the committee or the secretary will be pleased to furnish any desired information. The same can be had at the exhibition office, City Hall, Toronto.

HARRISONBURG, VA.

Editor American Fancier:

The Virginia Valley Poultry Club will hold its first annual show at Harrisonburg, Va., December 4 to 5.

This is the first time in many years that a poultry show of any kind has been given in the Valley of Virginia, but it is believed that it will be a good one.

Premiums will consist of many cash and merchandise specials on pens of each variety, and first and second cock, cockerel, hen and pullet of each variety also. All birds classed in the American Standard of Perfection will be judged according to it by the score card.

Other varieties will be judged by comparison. Mr. George O. Brown, of Baltimore, has been selected as judge. He has a big reputation and judges shows from Maine to Florida. He will judge at the great Hagerstown show this month. A score card with his signature as judge is never questioned and is worth a dollar to any exhibitor. He knows exactly what he owns.

J. F. Early will be superintendent of the show room. He will have several assistants, who are practical poultrymen, that will feed, water and care for the birds, so exhibitors may rest assured that their birds will receive all necessary attention.

C. O. HENTON, Sec'y.

RHODE ISLAND REDS AT BROCKTON.

This variety made a grand showing in the new poultry building, with good light, plenty of room, Empire coops. In fact, the Reds turned out one of the largest classes on exhibition—two hundred twenty-seven birds, both single and rose combs. The quality was the best ever, especially the single combs, showing marked improvements over former years, even at some of the largest shows. The competition in Single Comb cockerels and pullets was swift. The winners should be heard from later. There were also some fine birds, outside of the ribbons, which when more matured will make the winners hustle to beat them. As a whole the birds were very well matured for the time of the year. Brockton is certainly getting to be the early Red show of the earth.

Next week the great Crystal Palace Show will be held at Sydenham, London, England. What Madison Square Garden is to America, the Crystal Palace is to England, her foremost annual exhibition, the battle ground for fanciers of all varieties of pigeons and poultry.

As the Dairy is the salesroom for the Palace, many winners are purchased annually at the Dairy for the Palace. So the Palace is the salesroom for our Madison Square Garden. As soon as the awards are known in America of the victors at the Palace, the cables are kept warm, until many a Palace winner finds his home in the United States, and then battle with our American production, sometimes victorious; other times not; but it is always interesting and instructive competition, to say the least.

As this publication has made arrangements to have a few thousand copies of this issue distributed at the Palace, we mention this fact.

* * * * *

No less than twenty-seven judges of Pigeons are employed at the Palace. Mr. A. Leith, Pouter, young and novice Pigeons, Norwich Croppers; Mr. H. A. Howard, adult and selling Pigmies; Mr. C. A. House, Fantails; Mr. C. J. Hill, adult Jacobins; Mr. A. A. Burnett, young Jacobins; Mr. F. Firth, Barbs; Mr. C. A. Schunck, old bird and yearling Dragoons; Mr. W. H. Johnston, young Dragoons; Mr. A. Houghton, Turbits; Mr. F. J. Wiltshire, Archangels; Mr. G. E. Danks, Self Tumblers; Mr. T. T. Stone, Balds, Mottles, Rosewings; Mr. E. P. Briggs, remainder; Mr. F. Warner, Magpies; Mr. J. Brayshaw, English Owls; Mr. J. W. Swan, foreign Owls; Mr. A. Blackmore, Frills; Mr. W. Williams, Show Homers; Mr. J. R. Billington, genuine Fliers; Mr. M. Willan Dent, Cumulets; Mr. R. Yeo, Tipplers; Mr. C. S. Palmer, Carriers; Mr. C. Burton Barnes, Nuns, A. O. V. and Selling; Mr. J. Oliver, Scandaroons; Mr. G. Powell, Antwerps; Mr. W. A. Haster, Runts.

* * * * *

Mr. F. Warner, that noted Magpie breeder, English, of course, held his usual place at the Dairy Show. Many present day winning Magpies in this country were bred in Mr. Warner's lofts. Last year at Madison Square Garden his stock was well represented and did extremely well for those fortunate enough to risk importation.

* * * * *

In Fantails, Mr. Geo. E. Gray swept the boards at the Dairy, a trifle lucky, as Mr. Stevenson's entry in old bird classes were too late for judging. But Mr. Gray certainly deserves great credit; he has kept Fantails prominent in England since his career started some five years ago. Competition is what brought Fantails where they are, and Mr. Gray has certainly given that.

* * * * *

The premium list of the New York Show has gone to press, and in a couple of weeks intending exhibitors will have their entry blank before them.

Entries should be made early as the space, although the largest in America, will not hold all. Remember, many were refused last year. The demand has been steadily increasing, until now the management has to limit the entry. So be early if you wish to be represented at America's leading exhibition. A show where the commended ribbon is a testimonial of quality. For premium list address, H. V. Crawford, Montclair, N. J.

* * * * *

The Boston Show will be on the boards again this year with another grand display. The judges so far selected are Messrs. F. M. Gorse and Geo. Eustis on Tumblers; Samuel Johnson, Fantails; F. M. Gorse also on Jacobins; E. H. Barnes probably on Dragoons.

* * * * *

The Magpie Club will probably meet again in the East, whether at New York or Boston we cannot say, but understand that Mr. Alex. Ingram will again handle the stick at New York.

* * * * *

Dr. Gibson, who made a most excellent winning at Chicago last winter over birds which held premier honors at New York, is expected this season in the East. If the Doctor can bring such quality to New York, there is sure to be something doing in Magpie circles.

* * * * *

Herbert L. Davenport of Fall River has been elected to judge Exhibition Working Homers at Boston, the annual meeting of the Exhibition Working Homer Club. The club has a very attractive list of specials and should bring out a good entry in these classes. Walter A. Hersey of South Boston is the hustling secretary. Every breeder of Exhibition Working Homers should join this club and help boost a coming variety.

* * * * *

The American Jacobin Club has arranged a most excellent list of specials for its coming annual meeting, Madison Square Garden, January 1-5, 1907. Mr. C. A. Koehler will place the awards.

* * * * *

We understand a party in Boston has recently imported a number of Exhibition Flying Homers, all 1906 bred. Among these are the 1st Settle, 1st Radipole, 3d Bridlington mealy hen and 3d Bridlington cock. This is a step in the right direction, and should improve our American strain. The better imported, the better we breed, and that has been proven with numerous varieties of the Columbarium tribe before.

WASHINGTON WILL HAVE A SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

Just a line to say that Washington, D. C., will have a show this winter. The first meeting of the association is set for Tuesday, Oct. 30th, when plans will be perfected. The Masonic Temple has been secured for the week of Jan'y 20th, 1907, and it is most likely Empire coops will be used. The Masonic Temple is the best and, I might say, only hall in Washington for a Pigeon and Poultry show. It is located at the busiest corner in the city, 9th and F streets, N. W. The transfer corner for several other lines, and within two blocks of every other line. The hall question is all that has stood in the way of our annual show here, but I thing it is safe to say that it is now settled for all time. I have not the slightest doubt that this will be the best show Washington has ever seen, for never was there such an interest shown throughout the country as is evidenced this year by the inquiries, indeed I might say demands and supplications. I am joyous to tell them the glad news, and we hope to see them all on hand.

The boys like to trot a heat in the capital occasionally and show their M. C.'s, senators, as well as foreign diplomats what they are doing in the bird line. Next week I will be able to tell you the batting order of the association.

E. C. DUFFY.

WESTERN BARB AND CARRIER CLUB OF AMERICA.

At a meeting of club held at Chicago, Illinois, October 5th, it was decided to change the name of club from the Western Barb and Carrier Club of America to National Carrier Club of America, so hereafter this club will be known and show under said name. Mr. L. Leslie, former secretary of the club, resigned. Christian Schaefer was then elected secretary pro tem, thereby leaving the office of president vacant, to which Mr. J. H. Best was elected as president pro tem.

A resolution was also passed to recognize all seamless bands in the 1906 young bird classes of members showing in this class, to compete for all specials in these classes.

New club rooms have also been secured at 2714 Princeton avenue, Chicago, Illinois. It is the intention of the club to hold meetings every two weeks until the annual meet this winter. All Chicago members are making their best efforts to make the coming meet one of the best and largest Carrier exhibits ever penned in this country. From all indications and promises at present, the coming meet will find at least 200 birds penned. I would, therefore, ask all breeders of carriers to send in their names and become members of the club, so that you can all compete for the numerous specials which will be put up by the club and its members.

The National Fanciers' and Breeders' Association of Chicago have guaranteed four silver cups if the club meets with them. The Milwaukee Pigeon Association has also made the club a very good proposition, but of course the meeting place will be decided by vote of the members. I think it would be of advantage to some of the Eastern breeders of Carriers to join the club and show with us this winter. The breeding season has been very fair with some of the western breeders this season, and especially in Whites, Duns and Blacks. Now, boys, let's wake up and keep on the move until our meet, and see if we cannot put up an exhibit of carriers that will surpass both in quality and numbers anything put up heretofore outside of New York city. You can do it if you will only put your shoulders to the wheel. One more word, do not delay or put it off until some other time, but send in your name at once and become a member of this club. Our aim is not for any one section of this country, be it North, South, East or West, but for the whole United States and Canada, as the name will indicate, National Carriers Club of America.

C. SCHAEFER, Sec'y.

FANTAIL SPECIALTY CLUBS.

By H. M. Pockman.

Fantails, to-day one of the most foremost varieties of the Columbarium tribe, owe their present popularity to the untiring efforts of two specialty clubs, the Eastern Fantail Club of American and British Fantail Club of England.

Members of both clubs have responded to the call for specials in a most creditable manner, and at the coming great events, the Crystal Palace of England and Madison Square Garden of America, Fantails will compete for a list of specials equaled by few and surpassed by no specialty club.

The Eastern Fantail Club was organized in 1896 at New York, and at that time had on its membership roll every breeder of note in America, and as new fanciers appeared during this ten years of prosperity of the Fantail fancy their names were added.

Only a few years past, whites were the center of attraction and were the only color perfected in body and tail properties, but as the clubs offered encouragement, by offering specials, cups, etc., for other colors, interest developed, more fanciers strived to produce birds for high quality. What is the result?

Blacks, Blues, Saddles, and we may say Red and Yellows, although the latter is one of the last to really improve, are exhibited equal to Whites, in fact at the present time it is no uncommon occurrence to see the special for the best Fantail in the show attached to the pen of a colored bird.

At times Fantails have gained considerable notoriety by the cry of faking, uttered generally by some disappointed exhibitor, although, as some would think, detrimental to the breed, it has really been a benefit as it kept the variety before the public.

Both clubs have done all in their power to govern this most important question, and have succeeded in more ways than one. Conditioning and faking have been two terms very hard for some to understand. As long as competition exists just so long will fanciers pen their exhibit to the best of their ability, experience is here a great advantage, but Fantails are produced to-day so near perfect in tail formation that it is seemingly impossible to improve except possibly a little smoothing of the feathers.

Beginners, providing they have the right start, have a most excellent chance to make a record at the large exhibitions.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Eastern Fantail Club will be held this year at Madison Square Garden Jan'y 1st-5th, 1907. The list of specials given caters to all colors, money specials well distributed.

For the best White, bred 1906, owned and bred by an exhibitor (member of the club), silver challenge bowl, value $150.00, to be won three times before ownership can be claimed. Won 1904 by Messrs. Havemeyer Bros., 1905 and 1906 by James Blair.

For the best Saddle in the show, a silver challenge cup, value $50.00, offered by Mr. Geo. E. Rowland. (For members only).

For the best Black, silver cup, winner to become the owner. (For members only).

DRAGOONS.

Mr. Alex. Wright, one of the oldest and most foremost breeders of Dragoons in England, writes the very interesting and instructive article in Pigeons and Poultry, which will be most beneficial to American breeders of this very popular variety.

The production of what, I feel sure, will be a handsome and fascinating addition to the colors of the game cock of the Pigeon Fancy must appeal to every breeder of Dragoons. It is in the hope that others may be spared the pitfalls and profit by my experience during the breeding season of 1906 that I venture to pen these notes.

I paired up no less than 13 pairs of birds for this purpose, and made use of some of the best blood in the Dragoon Fancy. The reason of this was that if anything approaching the color at which I was aiming was obtained, the type would in all probability be worth building upon. I determined to make an effort to graft into the progeny, the color of eye, black beak and hard cere, of the harder variety of Dragoons, and with this idea I made use of both blues and grizzles. I had heard of isolated cases of bad colored mealies being bred from red chequers, and this color I used as the basis for my experiments.

I paired up a red chequer cock and grizzle hen, a grizzle cock and red chequer hen, a red chequer cock and blue hen, a blue cock and red chequer hen, a silver cock and red chequer hen, a red chequer cock and silver hen. I had nine pairs of these various combinations of red chequer with blue, silver and grizzle, and as my grizzles are usually of a medium to light shade, I was rather hopeful of that cross. My hopes were, however, cruelly disappointed, the nearest approach to mealy being some grand typed birds of a color which I understand is in Jacobins and Turbits, termed "Strawberry." These were bred from a very light grizzle hen, and I am hoping they may prove useful in further experiments The blue chequer blood in the red chequer proves rather a serious stumbling block, as it will persist in asserting itself. Although I had not a single blue chequer in the aviaries, still I bred a fair number of that color.

The colors I obtained from the above crosses were blue, blue chequer, red chequer, strawberry, some very bad colored red chequer grizzles (but, alas! of a lovely type), and some half-dozen mealies, all of a harsh color, and unfortunately none of a very desirable type.

In talking the matter over with several fanciers, I had previously been warned that I might be disappointed in my experiment, and was strongly advised to include in the experimental pairs a few silver dun Antwerps. Fortunately I did so. I paired four silver dun Antwerp cocks with four of my best blue Dragoon hens. Every pair produced fertile eggs, and to my astonishment the nineteen youngsters reared have taken after the cock in color. They are all mealies, and some very beautiful colors, too.

The result of the Antwerp experiment is very striking, and would appear to show that the beautiful Antwerp color is very assertive, and should, like former experiments in red chequer breeding, be grafted on to the Dragoon without great difficulty.

My own idea of further experiment had been to cross any decent pure Dragoon mealies with an Antwerp-Dragoon cross. I am afraid the latter crossed back to a blue Dragoon might result in producing all blues, or it should have a great effect in establishing the ruby eye, damson cere and black beak.

However, these are matters for future experience. My notes are intended to save time and trouble by pointing out what I am quite satisfied are useless crosses. I should state that the few pure Dragoon mealies I bred were from one pair, viz., a blue cock and a red chequer hen, a sister of which, I understand, formerly bred a mealy. It will be noticed, I paired no red chequers together. I was anxious to engraft on my foundation the ruby eye, black cere and beak of the harder colors, and evidently, as my experience proves, was too confident of producing a mealy from one or other of my numerous pairs.

I hear that several mealies have this season made their appearance in various lofts, but whether from pure Dragoon stock or with an Antwerp cross I cannot say. With an idea of giving breeders an opportunity of comparing their efforts, I have arranged with the Manchester Show committee to give two classes—cock and hen—for mealies bred in 1906. I sincerely hope that in a few years this color will be sufficiently established to hold its own with the beautiful red chequers, which are now fairly plentiful.

I trust other breeders may afford us the result of their experiences in mealy breeding, in order that we may be enabled to take the shortest cut to produce what I venture to think would be one of the most beautiful colors ever seen in Dragoons.

In conclusion, I would ask that the color aimed at should be the beautiful soft color of the silver dun Antwerp, with the addition of a ruby eye, damson cere, and black beak, and the frosted neck feathering of a light grizzle. I prefer the name "mealy" to "silver dun" only as a greater contrast to silver and silver chequer, which we already have in Dragoons. The name is used in both Show and Flying Homers, amongst which we find colors as soft and clear as the silver dun Antwerp.

TWO THOUSAND HENS IN ONE HOUSE.

Plan For a Big Hennery.

During the past year various articles purporting to describe a house for keeping 2,000 hens have appeared. The subject is of much interest to many, and we have arranged with Dr. B. Burr, of Maryland, to describe the house in which such a flock of hens is kept.

The "Burr 2,000-hen one-man house," the writer believes, is a solution of the problem of keeping poultry on a paying scale. The superstition that hens kept in flocks larger than 20 to 30 would not give as good results as the smaller flocks, giving 10 square feet of house room and 100 square feet of yard room as the smallest area compatible with good results, is absolutely false, being based entirely upon theory, while the basic law is that results are governed by the cubic feet of clean, fresh air available for each bird. While hens require warmth only during four months of the year, and during the other eight months all the active air they can get, most poultry houses are constructed to keep them warm for 12 months. The further disadvantage of a divided house is that the conditions of light, heat and air are not alike in any two pens. In regard to yards, "unlimited" healthy range for one thousand hens can be had in a yard 100 feet square, provided this yard is kept plowed and sown to green feed as often as it becomes bare. As a matter of economy in green feed and labor three or four such yards are attached to each house, front, back and at either end in a single 1,000-hen house, and a continual crop of green fod is produced, the growing of which keeps the yards from becoming "sick." The same sanitary care of the dirt in the house accomplishes the same ends, viz: the dirt from the lower scratching floor is thrown to the upper roosting floor, and raked out gradually with the manure, thus keeping the lower floor always sweet and clean. The straw or other litter used for scratching is changed every few weeks and spread on the land for top-dressing.

The house is built long and narrow to give the most light and air and controllable ventilation. It is built in two stories to economize roof, cost and labor, and insure dry and airy sleeping quarters. The lower story front is partially enclosed with glass doors in Winter to keep out rain, snow and wind, and the house is faced a trifle to the east of southeast to give the greatest amount of sun in Winter and the least in Summer. Take any unused building, preferably one that can be placed in a lot and faced as above, and if your studding is long enough put in a floor, giving head room for the attendant upstairs and down. If not, raise the building high enough from the ground to make the distance from ground to plate 11 or 12 feet. Set on posts three feet in the ground (this is the only foundation that is rat and mouse proof), and raise the grade of ground 12 inches under house, sloping away from it.

Upstairs place a two-sash window reaching from six inches below the plate to the floor, every 16 feet is enough, and two on each end smaller and set higher up above roost level. Have a door in each end. Downstairs the whole front is wired in, with a wire door under each window. The ends and back are tight with a door under each window at the ends and every eight feet on the back. Make the back doors opening alternately right and left, so that they can be partially opened in any wind when needed. Place 10 nest boxes on legs 12 inches from floor on each side, and run roosts not over five feet long and 22 inches apart at right angles to the length of building. If the building is wide enough (over 18 feet) this gives between each set of windows a set of seven roosts on each side, with a central passage between them for cleaning and a passage on each side for egg-gathering.

The simplest roost is a piece of 2x2-inch, slightly rounded on the top, bored on the lower side half way through and set on a three-eighths-inch iron rod driven into the floor. If your floor beams are 22 inches from centers this rod will drive into them through floor; if not, nail a header below floor in line of irons and bore one inch into header.

In front of each north window in line of roost is a trap door three feet long and the width of the space between floor beams. Running in from the north side of this opening to a support two feet from the lower dirt floor in the center of building is the runway, giving the fowls free passage up and down. This is best made of siding lapped uphill to catch their feet, and being caught below by a notch or side can be slid up at night. Figuring that a hen is entitled to eight inches of roosting room, you can put in your building as many hens as your roosts will hold without fear of crowding.

The care of two thousand hens thus housed does not take over four working hours a day, distributed as follows: At sunrise open trap doors and in cold weather south windows, if the day is bright. If not, do not open windows any more than they have been open all night until the sun becomes warm. Mixed grain is thrown in litter and water troughs filled. We use 10-foot galvanized four-inch gutter set in frame 12 inches from ground, with running board six inches from ground and trough covered with slanting roof to keep hens out of the water. The plumber will solder in ends and hole for cork. In very cold weather a pail of hot water is put in each trough to take off the chill before cold water is put in. During the morning the hoppers are kept filled if you use the dry feeding method; if not, mash is fed at 11 o'clock; then green food given them (cabbage, rutabagas, mangels, sugar beets in cold weather, lawn clippings for eight months in the year). At night eggs are gathered and mixed grain thrown in litter, and after they have gone to bed the house is closed up, the windows closed, in accordance with the weather, but never tight; the water troughs washed clean and left empty. During cool weather, when it can be got sweet, green bone is ground and fed every day, and it is to the hen what silage is to the cow. The work being all under cover makes it easier to take thorough care of the flock, and your presence among them at all times makes them very tame and easily handled, especially if you trap-nest as you should.

The house being light, airy and clean, and none of the work arduous, gives the women an opportunity to keep poultry on a paying scale, and conducted in this way poultry keeping is essentially a woman's business

The breeding, hatching and raising of 1,000 pullets each year to keep your 2,00 hen house full is not within the scope of this article, but with proper appliances and methods is just as simple and sure as the above. If you are not a born "chicken crank," avoid the business as you would the itch, for its attention to detail will drive you to drink, or, what is worse, lead you to shirk, fail and condemn the poultry business as a financial failure, but if you enjoy the work and get pleasure from the idiosyncracies of your hens, then start a small unit and grow with them until you have reached your "hen-keeping" capacity.—B. Burr in Rural New Yorker.

WARMTH IN NEWSPAPERS.

Old newspapers or brown wrapping paper can be used for rendering the poultry house warm. Make some good paste, using equal parts of rye and wheat flour, apply it on the walls liberally. Then spread it on the paper. When dry add another layer of paper and finish by swabbing the outer layer with a coating of paste. This is a cheap mode of making the house warm, and it will last all winter. When warm weather approaches remove the paper, in order to prevent the harboring of lice, and swab the walls with kerosene.

WHAT A STAR INCUBATOR WILL HATCH

All eggs are alike to the STAR INCUBATOR. Orpington's or Ostrich's; Minorca's or Mud Turtle's; Ancona's or Alligator's; Plymouth Rock's or Peacock's, it makes no difference; a STAR will hatch them.

The STAR INCUBATORS AND BROODERS have been used successfully for many years in all parts of the world, especially in England and the colonies.

The STAR INCUBATORS are made in several sizes from 50 egg capacity for family or fancier use, to 350 egg capacity for farm use. The heating, ventilating, regulating and moisture arrangements are positively accurate.

The STAR BROODERS are also made in several sizes and styles, and will care for and rear the chicks as well as the mother hen.

The prices asked for the STAR INCUBATORS AND BROODERS are the very lowest, quality and capacity considered.

Our new large illustrated catalogue has much valuable information for those interested in poultry, and it's FREE. Write to-day. STAR INCUBATOR AND BROODER CO., 603 Church St., Bound Brook, N. J., U. S. A., or B. MAC KAY, LONG MARSTON, STRATFORD-ON-AVON, ENGLAND, Continental Agent.

Let Me Hand You My Latest Book on Poultry Culture

ABSOLUTELY FREE

I want to send you a copy of this book free. It is a gold mine of practical information for the poultry-raiser. I call it "An Easy Lesson in Poultry Culture," because the lessons it teaches are easy to learn and easy to apply. My object in publishing this book is to point out how dollars in place of cents can be made in producing poultry and eggs for market purposes. It is stated so plainly that the novice can follow the directions and make a success of the poultry business. I especially commend the chapter, "The Back-Lotter" to the city dweller who wants to "try-out" this business before going into it on a large scale. And then I have another book—a good companion for this one—"Poultry Feeding for Profit" that you should have also. It is full of feeding facts that I know, from actual experience, will be valuable to every chicken raiser. It gives feeding methods and information that will be helpful every day, for every fowl on your place—from the little chick "just out" to the old hen you are fattening for market. There is lots of money in the poultry business if you know how to handle chickens right. These two books will give you all the information you'll need—information you can put into practice. You cannot get this information anywhere else. Write today, I will send both books free, and also send my catalog on Model Incubators and Brooders the latest and most successful hatching and rearing machines on the market.

POULTRY EXPERIMENTS

By G. M. GOWELL.

In seeking for some better system of housing the birds one of the small close houses, formerly used, was changed into an open house. The building was 10 feet wide and 25 feet long. An opening 3 feet wide and 15 feet long was made close up under the plate, and was left open every day in winter, except when the snow or rain blew in. At night the opening was covered with a framed curtain made of cotton cloth. An elevated roosting closet along the entire length of the back of the building was made it each year and did not have a sick bird in it. Not a case of cold or snuffles developed from sleeping in the closet with its cloth front, and then going directly down into the dry straw, in the cold room, and spending the day in the open air.

The birds laid as well as did their mates in the large warmed house. Their combs have been red and plumage bright and they have given every evidence of perfect health and vigor. While they are on the roosts, in bed, they are warm. They come down to their breakfasts and spend the day in the open air. Such habits of life partition between the 2 rooms was made of 2 inch mesh poultry netting. There were 4 openings in the front of the building, 2 in each room, equal distances apart. Each opening was 3½ by 8 feet in size, fitted with frame cloth curtains, to be used only on winter nights and stormy days, in the same way that they were in the Pioneer house. These openings were put close up to the plates and came down to within 1½ feet of the floor. There were no glass windows in the building.

The house was not satisfactory. There were currents of air from one lessened. One of the openings was closed by screwing glass windows on the outside. This left each of the rooms with one opening and one large glass window.

This change entirely corrected strong air currents through the building and sifting snow, except in heavy storms when the wind is strong from the south. Of course the large opening allows the wind to blow into the room, but as there is no outlet for it except where it came in, there are no drafts of air across the birds to cause them to be uncomfortable and take colds.

warm, by packing the walls with hay. A close fitting frame-cloth curtain shut them in at night.

It did not freeze in the closet and the birds apparently did not suffer for lack of air. They seemed to enjoy coming out of the warm sleeping closet, down into the cold straw, which was never damp, as the whole house was open to the outside air and sun every day. There were no shut off corners of the floor, or closet, that were damp. This building was used through three winters with 50 hens in seem to work equally well with brute or man.

After having used this so-called Pioneer house one year, a house was constructed 12 feet wide and 68 feet long. Its front and back walls were 5 feet high and the roof was evenly divided. It was divided into 2 rooms, each 34 feet long. The elevated roosting closets extended along the entire backs of each room and they were constructed in the same manner as the one in the Pioneer house. The end of the building to the other, even when there was little wind outside, and when the wind was high in winter the loose snow would be sifted in and distributed over a large part of the floor, dampening the litter and making life uncomfortable for the birds. The wire partition between the pens was replaced with one of close boards, and conditions were bettered; but each of the pens still had 2 openings, about 8 feet apart, and the same troubles from currents of air and sifting snow continued, although somewhat

Another difficulty remained: the opening came down to within 1½ feet of the floor, and the birds, sunning themselves on the floor or scratching in the litter, were in the direct course of the outside air as it came into the room and they tried to find sheltered corners where they might be more comfortable. On this account the width of the opening was reduced from 3½ feet to 2 feet by ceiling up the lower part of it. This gave a bulkhead 3 feet high, sufficient to protect the birds on the floor from the direct inflow of outdoor air, and they were happy.

One objection to this house still remains: its front wall is too low to allow room for a large opening, high enough so that the sun can shine in and back across the floor to the back wall during the short days in winter, when the sun runs low. This feature in construction, seems to be of the utmost importance, for dependence is had upon the sunshine and pure outside air, to keep the floor litter dry and the elevated roosting closet clean. The entire front of the roosting closet being open, leaves no dark corners where the air and light cannot do their thorough cleansing.

Experience with the house showed its several bad features. On the other hand, the Pioneer house, which had been in use for three years, gave great satisfaction, and the same general plan was adopted in the construction of a large house.

This house, designed as House No. 2, was built three years ago. It is 12 feet wide and 150 feet long and is divided into 20 feet sections. In each section, with its floor surface of 240 feet, 50 pullets have been wintered each year, most successfully.

Two years ago another house was built on the same plan, except that it is 16 feet wide instead of 12. It is 120 feet long and consists of 4 sections or houses, each 16 by 30 feet in size. There is no separate walk through the building, but in the close board partition, separating the pens, are doors. hung with double acting hinges, which allow them to swing both ways, and close automatically, after the attendant passes through. Each pen has a floor surface of 480 feet and gives ample accommodation to 100 hens. All of the hens in these two open front houses, in flocks of 50 or 100, averaged laying 144 eggs each last year, and the birds were in excellent health. The front curtains were open all of the time every day, except the very stormiest in winter.

While the same plan is common to all of these open front houses, the width has been increased in each succeeding one built. The first house was 10 feet wide, the second 12 feet, the third 16 feet in width. The laying and breeding house at Go-Well Farm, described on another page, is 20 feet wide and is more satisfactory than the narrower houses, because of economy in cost, and its greater housing capacity in proportion to its length, which reduces the labor required in caring for the birds, by having them in square rooms rather than in long narrow ones.

Additional Opportunities for Investigation.

The poultry plant at the Station is devoted to experiment and research work. There are many questions relating directly to commercial poultry operations, that are left untouched because the Station plant was already taxed to its capacity.

When the Go-Well poultry farm was established, last year,the opportunities were so good for studying poultry subjects on a purely commercial plant, where the entire energies of the place are devoted to this one business specialty, that arrangements were made with its owner which enables the Station to study the practical application of many of its own findings on an extensive, intensive business plant. Some of the results thus far obtained are made a part of the present bulletin.

Section 38.—At least one year before the time for a general revision of the American Standard of Perfection all such information, suggestions and requests shall be classified by this committee, and placed in convenient form for adoption or rejection by the Association at its annual meeting, or by a general revision committee to be appointed by the Association. This Standing Committee on Revision shall make an annual report to the Executive Board, and shall be made members of the General Committee on Revision to be appointed by the Association once in five years.

Section 39.—DUTIES OF THE ELECTION COMMISSIONER: On the first Tuesday of February of each year the Election Commissioner shall mail to the last known address of every member of the Association a printed nominating ballot, to be so designated, together with an official statement prepared by the Secretary-Treasurer, and approved by the President, naming the officers to be elected, and specifying the territories from which each is eligible; these nominating ballots to be made returnable within thirty days, and each ballot to be dated and signed in ink by the member whose vote it represents.

Section 40.—On receiving and counting the nominating ballots the Election Commissioner shall ascertain by mail, within the ensuing thirty (30) days, who among the five (5) candidates for each office receiving the highest number of votes, or who among the total number of candidates voted for, provided there are less than five (5) nominated for any office, are willing to stand for election, informing each candidate of the number of votes cast for him and for each of the other nominees thus honored for the same office and a list of all successful nominees for all offices of the Association.

Section 41.—On receiving authority to formally announce the various successful nominees, the Election Commissioner shall, within thirty (30) days of the counting of the nominating ballots, mail printed election ballots, to be so designated, to all members of the Association, making them returnable within thirty (30) days from the date of the printed notice that shall be enclosed with each ballot, naming the candidates for election, and giving full particulars as to their eligibility.

Section 42.—Exactly thirty days after the mailing of the election ballots the Election Commissioner shall count all votes received by him in the form of printed ballots, that are properly dated and legibly signed in ink by the members of the Association entitled to cast the same, and shall immediately furnish the poultry press a report of the officers elected, as shown on the face of the returns.

Section 43.—After counting the nominating and the election ballots the Election Commission shall carefully preserve same and deliver them either personally, or under seal, by registered mail or by express, to the President of the Association on the opening day of the annual meeting of the Association, before the opening session of the meeting has been called to order, who shall hand them in the unbroken package or packages, to the Chairman of the Board of Review, immediately after said Board of Review has been elected.

Section 44.—DUTIES OF BOARD OF REVIEW: On receiving the official ballots, both nominating and election, the Board of Review, assisted by the Election Commissioner, if he is in attendance at the meeting, shall carefully verify the work of said Commissioner, certify in writing to the election of the successful candidates, or the choice of the place of holding annual meetings, and shall report its findings to the meeting of the Association, as provided in the order of business. At the counting of the votes by the Board of Review, if it shall be found that two or more candidates, or two or more places of meeting, have received the same number of votes, this fact shall be reported to the annual meeting of the Association, whereupon the members present and constituting a quorum shall have power to elect their choice from the candidates or places that are a tie, a majority vote to be decisive.

ARTICLE VII—Annual Meetings.

Section 1.—The annual meetings of the Association shall be held in August of each year, at some central point to be determined once in three years by a vote of the members, cast by mail; the five points receiving the highest number of votes on the nominating ballot to be resubmitted for final choice, the point then receiving the highest number of votes to be declared the place of meeting for the next three years.

Section 2.—The election of each place of meeting shall be conducted by the Election Commissioner in substantially the same manner as that provided for the election of officers, the nominating and election ballots for the places of meeting to be sent out by said Election Commissioners once in three years, at the same time and in the same way as that required of him in conducting the election of officers; provided, further, that his work in receiving and counting said ballots shall be verified and certified to by the Board of Reviews, the same as prescribed in the case of election of officers.

ARTICLE VIII—Quorums.

Section 1.—Fifteen members of the Association present and voting shall constitute a quorum.

Section 2.—Eight members of the Executive Board present and voting shall constitute a quorum of said Board.

ARTICLE IX—Funds.

Section 1.—The moneys of the Association shall be kept in two separate funds, to be known as the Emergency Fund and Current Funds.

Section 2.—The money comprising the Emergency Fund shall be placed at interest in one or more banks at the discretion of the Finance Committee, and shall not be disturbed except by resolution adopted at an annual or special meeting of the Association.

Section 3.—A petty cash fund not to exceed one hundred dollars in amount shall be furnished the Secretary-Treasurer for small disbursements, which fund may be replenished from time to time on his making an itemized report, to be approved by the Finance Committee, and issuing a check for the amount so authorized, which check must be countersigned by the President.

ARTICLE X—Revision of Standard.

Section 1.—A general revision of the American Standard of Perfection shall take place once in five years and not oftener.

Section 2.—No changes shall be made in any part of the Standard of Perfection unless written notice, specifying word for word the proposed change or changes shall have been filed with the Secretary-Treasurer at least ninety days before the annual meeting at which the changes are to be acted upon, in which case the Secretary-Treasurer, in announcing the next annual meeting, shall notify all members of the proposed change or changes, specifying same word for word.

Section 3.—New breeds or varieties shall be admissable to the Standard of Perfection only at the time of general revision. Corrections may be made and omissions supplied by a majority vote at any annual meeting of the Association, on recommendation of the Standing Committee on Revision; provided written notice, specifying word for word the proposed corrections or omissions, shall have been filed with the Secretary-Treasurer ninety days before the date of the annual meeting at which same is to be considered, and that a printed notice, specifying such corrections shall have been mailed by him to each member of the Association at least sixty days before the date of said annual meeting.

ARTICLE XI—New Breeds and Varieties.

Section 1.—Before a new breed or variety can be admitted to the American Standard of Perfection it much comply with the following requirements, to wit:

(a) It must be able to produce fifty per cent. of the specimens reasonably true to the type and characteristics of the breed or variety, as set forth in the proposed Standard, and must have been exhibited in at least two generations, both male and female, at not less than three annual meetings of the Association.

(b) Written notice of the presence of such breed or variety for inspection at annual meetings shall, upon each occasion, be supplied the Secretary-Treasurer the the place and time of meeting, and the Secretary-Treasurer shall ascertain whether or not the required exhibition of specimens have been made, and shall record the facts in the official minutes of the meeting.

(c) Both male and female specimens of at least two generations each must be on exhibition at the time when the breed or variety shall be presented for admission to the Standard of Perfection, in order that the members of the Association may inspect the breed or variety to determine the propriety of admitting it in accordance with the specifications of the application.

(d) If application is made for admission of a new breed, the breed must possess such new breed characteristics as to give it a very distinct character of its own, and if application is made for admission of a new variety, the variety must truly possess all the type characteristics of the breed of which it is a variety. Extraordinary care shall be exercised to prevent multiplicity of varieties.

Section 2.—A petition addressed to the American Poultry Association shall be presented:

(a) This petition shall contain a description of the breed or variety seeking admission, together with all ascertainable facts regarding its origin and breeding, and a prayer for its admission.

(b) Affidavits of not less than five breeders of the breed or variety shall be presented, containing statements of the percentage of specimens breeding reasonably true to type and characteristics of the breed or variety as above required.

(c) The proposed standard for the breed or variety shall be presented at the same time with the petition, but may be amended by the petition or the Association before the admission of the breed or variety. This standard shall be read at the meeting at which admission of the breed or variety is sought.

(d) At least ninety (90) days prior to the meeting of the Association at which admission to the Standard of Perfection is sought the papers required in the application shall be filed with the Secretary-Treasurer, who shall give to all members of the Association sixty days' notice of the pendency of such application.

Section 3.—If upon consideration of all the evidence, the Association is satisfied that the breed or variety is worthy of recognition in the Standard of Perfection; that it has, in fact, the qualities and characteristics set forth in the application; that all claims and characteristics set forth in the application are justified, and that all requirements for its admission have been complied with, a majority vote of the members present and voting by written ballot shall admit the breed or variety to the Standard of Perfection.

ARTICLE XII—Amendments.

This Constitution and By-Laws of the Association having been approved by a two-thirds vote of all members present at a regular meeting of the organization, can be repealed or amended only by a like vote. Such repeal or amendment must be offered in writing, and be forwarded by the person proposing same to both the President and Secretary-Treasurer; and the Secretary-Treasurer, if so directed by a majority of the Executive Board, shall have such repeal or amendment printed, and shall mail a copy to every member of the Association at his last known address, sixty days prior to the meeting at which said repeal or amendment is to be acted upon.

By-Laws.

ARTICLE I.

Robert's Rules of Order shall be Parliamentary Guide of this Association subject to special rules that may be adopted.

ARTICLE II—Order of Business.

1—Roll call.
2—Reading minutes of last meeting.
3—Election of Board of Review.
4—Report of Executive Board.
5—Report of Committees.
6—Unfinished Business.
7—Report of Board of Review.
8—Inauguration of Officers.
9—New Business.
10—Discussions.
11—Adjournment.

ARTICLE III—Licensing Judges.

Section 1—Two classes of judges of poultry shall be recognized and licensed by a majority vote at annual meetings of this Association, to be known as American Poultry Association judges, namely, general judges, comprising those who are licensed to judge all varieties of fowls represented in the American Standard of Perfection, and specialty judges, including those who are licensed to judge one or more varieties in the Standard, but not all varieties; provided, that such judges must be members of this Association.

Section 2—At the first annual meeting of the Association, following the adoption of this Article, the Executive Board shall report in writing, with recommendations, a list of experienced judges, divided into two classes, general and specialty, including therein all persons it believes should receive licenses without other endorsement and without charge. Members of the Association present said annual meeting shall be entitled to supplement the foregoing described list, provided that names thus suggested shall be referred to the Executive Board and must be reported upon favorably by said Board.

Section 3—Applicats for judges' licenses not provided for in the foregoing section shall be endorsed by at least five licensed judges of the American Poultry Association, in the form of separate letters addressed personally by said judges to the Secretary-Treasurer of the Association, who shall transmit same to the Executive Board in due course.

Section 4—Applicants for judges' licenses shall sign application blanks furnished by the Secretary-Treasurer of the Association for this purpose.

Section 5.—Each such applicant shall file with the Secretary-Treasurer a statement of his qualifications and experience as a poultry judge; also three or more references as to his reputation for uprightness of character in the community where he resides.

Section 6—Printed notice of each application, with the names of the five or more licensed judges who have endorsed each applicant, must be sent to all members of the Association by the Secretary-Treasurer at least sixty days before the opening date of the annual meeting of the Association, at which action is to be taken on the application, thus giving members the opportunity to protest, for cause, if they so choose.

Section 7—The application blank signed by each person desiring to become a licensed judge of poultry, as herein provided for, shall clearly state that if the license asked for is issued, it shall be revocable by the Executive Board of this Association, for cause, subject to appeal to the Association at its next annual meeting.

Section 8—Each license issued under this Article shall state whether the licensee is a general or a specialty judge, and, if the latter, it shall name the varieties said licensee is licensed to judge.

Section 9—A charge of two dollars shall be made for each license issued, as per Sections 3 to 9 inclusive of this Article, to cover cost of correspondence and clerical work.

ARTICLE IV—A. P. A. Poultry Show Rules.

The following rules and regulations shall be printed on the back of each entry blank used by Branch and Associate members of the American Poultry Association, or other clubs or societies whose exhibitions are to be held, and advertised to be held, under the poultry show rules of the American Poultry Association, and must be signed in ink by each exhibitor whose entries are accepted.

Section 1—Any person under disqualification by the American Poultry Association for fraudulent practices is ineligible to compete or judge at this show. Fraudulent practices shall be understood to include, among other dishonorable acts, the lending, borrowing or hiring of birds for exhibition in competition; also "faking" of any kind, as defined in the Glossary of Technical Terms in the American Standard of Perfection.

Section 2—Every bird entered for competition must be the bona fide property of the exhibitor, otherwise all entries of the exhibitor shall be cancelled, he shall forfeit all entry fees, shall receive no prize money or other premiums, and if ordered to do so must remove his exhibit from the show room within forty-eight hours. In case of disqualification under this rule other exhibits may, at the discretion of the management, be moved up in the list of winners, subject to the disqualified exhibitor's right of appeal.

Section 3—Any exhibitor at this show, if called upon to do so by the management, shall make affidavit that he is the bona fide owner of every bird entered by him for competition.

Section 4—The judge or judges officiating at this show shall disqualify any exhibit found to contain a specimen entered for competition that is not the bona fide property of the exhibitor, or that has been faked.

Section 5—This Association reserves the right to return entries, thus enabling the Secretary to exclude the exhibits of any disqualified person endeavoring to show under his own or another's name. In the event of it coming to the knowledge of the management that any disqualified person is exhibiting, his birds shall be debarred from competition, his entries cancelled, entry fees forfeited, and prize money and other premiums withheld.

Section 6—Exhibitors must not interfere with, nor attempt in any manner to influence the judge or judges officiating at this show, on penalty of having their entries disqualified by the judge or show management, and of having their winnings protested by other exhibitors in the class.

Section 7—The judges shall be required to place, or superintend the placing, of all prize ribbons or prize cards on the coops of the winning specimens.

Section 8—No bird shall be removed from the show until the close of the same without the written consent of the Secretary.

Section 9—Any exhibitor who shall be disqualified at this show for fraudulent practices shall have the right of appeal to the Executive Board of the American Poultry Association, also to the next annual meeting of the Association; but meanwhile shall be temporarily disqualified from exhibiting at any show held under American Poultry Association rules, and it is understood that every exhibitor who signs this entry blank thereby agrees that his entries may be cancelled, and all entry fees, prize moneys and other premiums withheld by the management of this show, in the event of his being disqualified; provided that, if his appeal is sustained, all entry fees, prize moneys and other premiums shall be delivered to him; provided further, that his appeal must be made within one year of the date of the disqualification.

Section 10—Notice of disqualification with a detailed statement of facts, with such corroborative evidence as is procurable, shall be mailed within five days after the close of the show by the Secretary or some other officer of this Association to the Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poultry Association, and a complete copy of the notice of disqualification, and other papers or charges accompanying said notice, shall be mailed at the same time to the exhibitor or judge disqualified.

Section 11—In case of alleged fraudulent practice on the part of any judge, exhibitor or other person, or of collusion, the aggrieved exhibitor shall have the right to protest in writing, on depositing the sum of five dollars with the secretary of the show, and said protest shall be passed upon forthwith by the management of the show, subject to an appeal by either party to the Executive Board of the American Poultry Association and to the next annual meeting of the Association. In case the protest is sustained, the fee shall be refunded.

Section 12—Any person may protest in writing for palpable dishonesty or fraudulent practice of the judge in placing awards. Such protest must be handed to the Secretary of the show, and a copy delivered or mailed to the judge and to the Chairman of the Executive Board of the American Poultry Association, before the close of the show; provided, that an appeal may be taken to the Executive Board; also to the Association as a whole.

Section 13—No judge of poultry at this show shall exhibit in any class he is assigned to pass upon; should he do so, he shall be disqualified forthwith by the management on protest of any exhibitor or member of the American Poultry Association and another judge shall be assigned to the class.

Section 14—No exhibitor at this show shall receive a prize on any bird that has been owned by, or in the possession of, the judge assigned to the class within six months prior to the close of entries.

Section 15—The printed regulations or rules of this show, where they are not less stringent than, or where they do not conflict with, the foregoing, shall be binding on the exhibitors and judges and supplemental to the American Poultry Association rules.

Section 16—Any exhibitor at this show who is not a member of the American Poultry Association, shall submit, and hereby agrees to submit, to the jurisdiction of the American Poultry Association, and shall be dealt with as though he were a member of the Association. Each exhibitor at this show shall sign the appended declaration, to wit:

"TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: Be it known that for the purposes of this show I agree to be bound by the poultry show rules of the American Poultry Association, as above set forth.

BANTAMS.

Bantams are the pigmies of the poultry world. In the case of the large breeds, we want large size and fine development, but the opposite is our aim when we prepare to rear their smaller relations. Small size, combined with correct shape and accurate markings, is what we strive for, and great care has always to be exercised that nothing which unduly stimulates growth or hastens development is employed in the treatment of Bantams. It is very easy to grow big Bantams, even in the case of progeny from diminutive parents, and it requires careful handling throughout to rear them to the age of maturity and yet keep them small. For this purpose several things are required. First, the chickens should be hatched rather early in the season, or a trifle late in the season. (2d) The chickens must be hatched from stock of nice standard quality. If they are hatched say in April or May they have all the good weather before them, and are apt to attain rather full proportions for Bantams. But if they have to contend with cold weather at the start, or during the later stages of growth, their size is likely to be kept within reasonable dimensions. (3d) The question of feeding must be very carefully considered. Whatever promotes the formation of bone must be to a considerable extent avoided. They must certainly have some allowance of the mineral and other elements which all animal life demands if a healthy condition is to be maintained, but Bantams can thrive on a comparatively small share of such nutriment, and no more than what is necessary should be allowed.

Bantams should either be hatched by hens of their own race, or by small hens of the larger varieties. The chickens, though usually very nimble, are such little things that a clumsy or heavy hen may very quickly thin their numbers. To some extent they are tender, and should perhaps receive a little special care at first. They eat very little, but what they do dispose of should always be freshly prepared and suppled in perfectly clean vessels. Bantam chicks cannot stand unsavory surroundings. In such circumstances they soon pine and die off. Cleanliness and freedom from vermin are conditions which must be strictly assured.

When just hatched, the old fashioned egg and bread crumb food is most suitable, and may be continued for a week or ten days, but almost from the first some fresh, succulent green food should be cut very fine with a pair of scissors and mixed with it. Egg food by itself is rather binding to the bowels, but a due allowance of green food corrects this. By degrees they should be got on to other food, and boiled rice should form no inconsiderable part of their dietary. It may be swelled sometimes with skim milk and sometimes with water. Now and then oatmeal and barley meal mixed should be given, but not too much oatmeal, as this supplies a large proportion of bone-forming material. They should, however, receive a small allowance of it. A little boiled and grated bullock's liver mixed with the soft food twice or three times a week is also very good. Biscuit meal may also be given occasionally as a change. Canary seed may be freely used, and hempseed rather sparingly; dari is also suitable and later on, small wheat. Oats are not suitable. Some of the dry chicken feed now so freely advertised will prove serviceable. A good supply of small sharp grit is essential at all times, and a supply of clear, cold water, frequently renewed, is equally important.

Bantams should always be reared by themselves, never in company of large fowls, or chickens of the larger breeds. If that precaution is neglected, the lot of the Bantam chickens is a miserable one and failure is close at hand.

There are many interesting breeds of Bantams, and their number is being steadily added to, but I can only notice some of the most popular kinds and give a few hints as to their breeding.

The Old English Game Bantam is coming rapidly to the front, and undoubtedly has a fine future before it. It has all the beautiful lines of the large breed on a small scale, and an almost endless variety of color. There are Black Reds, Pyles, Spangles, Blue Reds, Blues and many others, some very beautiful colors being attained by crossing the various sub-varieties, and this is quite allowable, as they are all true Game. They are low on the leg as distinct from the Modern Game Bantam, and should be kept low. Any inclination to length of limb should be immediately penalized, as it savors of Modern blood. The head is very important. Fairly long and keen, with bold, bright eye, and just the smallest curvature of the eyebrow. The body is small and heart-shaped, and well set on firm legs. White legs seem to be preferred by some judges in the case of Black Reds, but this is the merest fad and should not be encouraged, yellow and willow being quite proper Game fowl colors. Old English Bantams are among the most attractive of all Bantams, and will give much pleasure to whoever takes them up. I have found them to be very good layers also. Of course the eggs are small for culinary purposes, but where there are children they are usually appreciated. The cockerels require to be dubbed a little before maturity is reached.

The Modern Game Bantams had once an extensive following, and it has a good one still, but its Old English relation has to some extent usurped its place. It is an exact picture of the long limbed Modern Game on a very small scale. They are extremely beautiful birds, but the chickens are a trifle delicate, at least those from highly inbred strains are. And I may here say that inbreeding in the case of Bantams is practiced to a very great extent. For one thing it can be made to assist in keeping the birds small, and for another it can readily be made to produce beautiful feather markings and typical shape. It can safely be employed to a much greater extent in the breeding of Bantams than in the production of large fowls.

There are Black Reds, Brown Reds, Pyles and Duckwings among Modern Game Bantams, and I may also add the Birchen, which are slowly coming to the front. Each and all of these have been bred to a high standard of excellence, and first-class specimens command high prices. In my opinion the Duckwing and the Brown Reds are specially handsome. The latter has made many friends recently and now that first-class stock is more widely distributed, it is likely to go ahead.

There is such a good lot of stuff in this variety sent to shows, that it is not worth while breeding specimens. It is, therefore, important to select the stock birds most carefully, and as two breeding pens, one for cockerels and the other for pullet breeding, are almost essential, the owner requires to weigh well in his mind all requirements before mating up his pens.

Indian Game Bantams have been steadily making friends during the last few years, and will yet be one of the most popular of breeds. They have hitherto been a trifle on the large side, but many very small and typical specimens have lately been produced, which has assured a proper size to the future race. A good many of them as yet come with too long legs, due to the fact that the Modern Game Bantams was employed in the making of the breed.

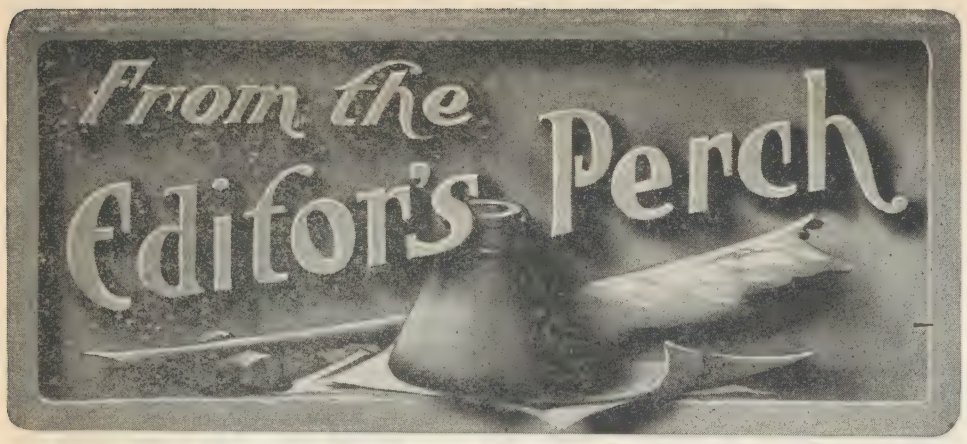
PROVIDENCE SHOW

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION

R. I. Poultry Association

December 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 1906.



Infantry Hall, Providence, R. I.

Liberal regular premiums on Poultry, Pigeons, Cats, and Cavies. Special Ribbons for shape.

Entries close November 17, 1906. Address for Premium Lists, 675-679

W. L. BROWN, Secretary,

6 Exchange Place, Providence, R. I.

The Westchester Poultry and Pigeon Association will hold its first winter show the third week of January, 1907, at White Plains, New York, so we are informed by Mr. F. W. Gaylor, who is one of the executive committee. As this date conflicts with Boston, it would seem advisable to hold the show at a later date. The month of January is well stocked with big eastern shows, viz: New York, Philadelphia, Auburn, Wilmington, Boston, Rochester, Springfield and quite a few others in New England states and in New York state. Fanciers who exhibit at White Plains are more than likely to show at one or more of the shows mentioned above and if the dates could be set for the last days of January and first few days of February, we believe a much longer entry will be the result. Another meeting of the above club will be held this week, when final arrangements will be completed and judges announced.

The Danbury Show will be one of the first to open the winter season and promises to excel all previous shows held in the famous hat city. This is one of the star shows of New England, the management being well experienced in handling an up-to-date exhibition. The prizes are liberal and the competition just as keen in the leading classes as the most thoroughly sportsmanlike fancier can wish for. Premium lists will be ready for mailing this week. A postal addressed to Charles H. Brundage, secretary, will bring one to each applicant. "Charley" Brundage advises us that a big chicken supper with "pumpkin" pie and sweet cider is on for one evening, at which Mr. "Wid" Card will officiate as chief speaker. It is not stated whether the chickens to be disposed of are of the famous Buff Laced Indian variety, so highly extolled by Mr. Card as the only real thing in the fowl meat line.

Mr. Jesse G. Darlington, one of the oldest and best known fanciers in the Quaker City, who is interested in the coming Philadelphia show, writes: I note your comment and suggestion of the change of date, to the first week in February. We will accept the change, as we do not wish to interfere with any other show, and it will help us in entries also. We hoped to have a good show as we used to have, and will hold a meeting the latter part of the coming week." This is the true spirit of a fancier. All we have to say is: Philadelphia should be in line year after year with a poultry, pigeon and pet stock show second to none in the United States. The writer of these notes has a very warm spot in his heart for "old Philly" and sincerely hopes the coming show will be a success from start to finish.

The Pittsburgh Fanciers' Club will hold its next annual show February 18 to 23, 1907. The following judges will officiate: Chas. McClave, G. O.Brown, W. C. Pierce, A. J. Edwards and G. F. Erbe. This is good news, as we class Pittsburgh among the A1 shows of the United States, and the fact that no exhibition was held in the Smoky City last year, due to the destruction of the hall by fire, should make the coming event greater than ever. The old guard are on deck and Moore, Selden, Skiles, Foster and Sutch make a hard combination to beat.

Mr. John M. Donohue, Wilmington, Del., lost a Pekin drake at the Hagerstown Show. This was a high class bird. Some years ago several other high class birds of this same breed were lost at the same show. Mistakes will occur, but coincidences are different propositions. Mr. Donohue would like his drake, and we do not blame him.

Speaking of Game Bantams, what has become of real good Blacks? The birds shown at fall fairs as Black Game Bantams are as a rule, a libel on the variety, in fact some do not contain an ounce of Game Bantam blood in their veins. Some years ago there were a number of good blacks shown, but they seemed to have died out. A fine opportunity is now at hand for first class fanciers to bring this beautiful variety to the front again and at the same time relegate to the pot all the dubbed single combed Black Rose Comb Bantams that are masquerading as Game Bantams at fall shows.

The Columbian Plymouth Rock is trying hard to get in line with other varieties now before the public. These single-combed Columbian Wyandottes for that is what they really seem to be, have made their appearance at a number of fall fairs this season. Some were not at all bad in color, but not a few, especially males, were faulty in combs. The latter had decided tendencies to side-sprigs, which being a disqualification, barred them from wining. The wonderful popularity of the Columbian Wyandotte no doubt is the cause of some of the ever-ready hunters after novelties to try and work in the Columbia Rock as a revenue getter.

Mr. George W. Weed offers his entire flock of Black Wyandottes for sale. He does this to make room for the Bantams he intends breeding in the future. No better flock of this really beautiful and useful variety of the Wyandotte family exists and we doubt if there is one to equal it in the United States. The records made the birds in Mr. Weed's pens at Madison Square Garden and at other large shows prove their blue-ribbon quality beyond a shadow of doubt. The demand for birds from his yards has been large, a number of orders being received from England for choice specimens. We understand that every bird in Mr. Weed's yards, which includes all his winners, are for sale. This is a rare opportunity to get a start with a variety that will please all who really love a good fowl.

We always admired Black Wyandottes and remember the day when we owned two black sports that came from a setting of White Wyandotte eggs. Both were pullets, fine in shape and beautiful in color. These we sold about eighteen years ago to Mr. Akerly of Tonawanda, N. Y., who was then starting a strain of Black Wyandottes. Mr. Clemens of Ohio was also an early admirer of them and bred some handsome specimens in his day. Eugene Sites in the same state, sticks to Black Wyandottes and produces top-notchers each season. The fact that this variety is a very handy fowl, a fine layer and a splendid table fowl, the carcass being plump and the skin a deep yellow, should make it far more popular than it is at present. Combining beauty with undoubted utilitarian qualities in a rare degree, it can be classed with the best varieties of American origin.

There will be but one New York show this season and that will be held at the old stand—the Madison Square Garden, under the auspices of the New York Poultry and Pigeon association, which has done so much to give the metropolis of the new world a successful annual exhibition second to none in the world. There was considerable talk last winter regarding the formation of a stock company for the purposes of holding another New York show earlier in the season and with a lower entry fee, but nothing resulted. Wiser counsel prevailed and all hands are pulling hard for Madison Square Garden this year. The premium list will be ready next week, when Secretary Crawford will begin mailing same. Intending exhibitors should see to it that they secure a copy early in order to make entries in good season, as the latter will be limited to a certain number this year. The The demand for exhibition cages will be larger than the supply. This is a tip to those who desire to secure such desirable space. The new rules in the premium list should be carefully read, as there are some radical changes made.

Mr. David Smith, the incubator expert of the Pineland Incubator Company, Jamesbury, N. J., has completed a new hot water machine built on the lines of the famous French incubators, but with many added improvements. This machine will be exhibited at the Madison Square Garden and should prove an interesting novelty and study. Mr. Smith built a similar machine for the writer of these notes in 1890, which was called the Parago[illegible] It certainly proved a fine hatcher, b[illegible] not having a regulator, and being rather cumbersome in appearance, did not take well from a commercial standpoint. These drawbacks have been removed and the new model is said to be a complete hatcher in every sense of the term.

Curtain fronts in chicken houses have proved their value and come to stay. A little more muslin and less glass in some of the outdoor brooders would not be out of order. Too much glass is used in certain makes and this requires far more care and attention in keeping even temperature and pure air than when muslin is used. The temptation to coddle chickens by giving them too high a temperature in the room is always great. The plac[illegible] for chickens to get warm when they need to is under a hen or a hover. Good pure, even cold air is conducive to exercise and good health and a healthy chicken likes to scratch for a living right from the start.

In one of the numerous big practical poultry plants where broilers are a specialty and chickens are simply kept in enclosures and brooders indoors until ready to kill, the results were excellent during the cold months. The warm days of spring and summer, however, caused a big percentage of losses and the "new system" was not the unqualified success its inventor and owner of the plant hoped for. It pays to get pretty close to nature when rearing young chickens.

Mr. William Barber, Toronto, Canada, has been elected judge of Games and Game Bantams at the Madison Square Garden, New York, show, by the American Exhibition Game and Game Bantam club. Mr. Barber has judged these classes before and to the satisfaction of the exhibitors. Being a veteran fancier of Games and Game Bantams, he is well qualified to judge them, his long experience in the show arena, together with his firm and cool temperament giving him the necessary qualities that make up a good judge of these most difficult of all classes to properly handle.

It is amusing to read in some of our western contemporaries such mistaken ideas as the following: "Comparison judging is guess work." If the writer of the latter could see a judge of Game Bantams at work on a hot class in New York he would soon find out his mistake in calling such labor "guess work." It takes a keen eye and fine judgment to place the awards correctly where a bunch of fifteen or twenty good stags confront the judge, as was the case not many years ago at the Garden. The score card would be a cinch compared with the work of sifting and sorting out the stars in the class by the comparison method. The mental upheaval caused by culling off the outs to a clerk is not very serious, although the score card result often is. We have Senator Peirce at work over several stags for nearly twenty minutes before he finally decided which was the best. That indefinable station which cannot be scored by pen or pencil is the little joker that must be looked out for. Station in a Game is what wins, all other points being equal. To get at the true station of a bird requires a little time, and a great lot of patience, as well as knowledge of what station really is. Scoring Games at the rate of thirty an hour is not judging. That is guess work.

That Constitution of the American Poultry Association as printed in the poultry papers for November will prove interesting reading, not only for members, but for those who are not, and more especially so to that little bunch of critics that has year in and year out taken delight in finding fault with everything the A. P. A. does. It is needless to state that some fault can be found in more than one spot of the newly proposed Constitution, not only by the critics referred to above but others as well. Let the fun begin.

The learned editor of Farm-Poultry should find plenty of ammunition for future editorials in these new rules that are to govern the vast poultry industry of the United States. He begins in timely fashion by referring to the Rhode Island Red Club standard in the November 1 issue of Farm-Poultry. This may not have anything to do with the new rules, but it indicates the stand he will take on A. P. A. matters and especially the Standard. Intimating that individual standards can be formulated and sold is a broad hint as to what may be expected in this direction in the future.

We are not certain, but believe the demand for individual standards is really greater than members of the A. P. A. are willing to believe. But that does not say that specialty clubs should publish their own standards in defiance of the copyright of the American Standard of Perfection. This is bad business.

There are many breeders in this country who do not care to buy a Standard containing all varieties, and one that is more expensive than need be. One dollar and a half is a pretty stiff price to pay, at least to a man who is interested only in one breed or variety. If the Standard could be divided in a number of sections, classing the American varieties in one, the Asiatics in another and so on through the list, and each one bound separately and sold at twenty-five cents a copy, we believe a very large demand would be created and much good accomplished in the greater distribution of these guides for breeding and exhibiting. The present standard is rather cumbersome. It is not a book that fits the average pocketbook any too well. Besides, it weighs several more ounces than is necessary. This is principally from a judge and exhibitor's stand-point. As a library book it is no doubt correct in form and style.

Criticisms are being made openly and not altogether disinterestedly, of the illustrations in the New Standard. This was to be expected. No sane man ever expected a set of illustrations, no matter how clever and good, to please everybody. That some of the breed types illustrated are not acceptable to many fair-minded fanciers goes without saying. They were not acceptable to some of the members of the committee of fourteen and later, the committee of five. Some were changed at Cincinnati and no doubt others will be changed at future meetings of the A. P. A. But as long as ideal illustrations are demanded, there is little hope of ever getting a complete set of pictures together that will prove satisfactory to all. Photographs of living models, sections and feathers thereof would give a far more beneficial result than all attempts of artists to imitate same by brush or pen. Wonderful progress has been made in photographing fowls and in making retouched illustrations from the plates. This readers of the American Fancier will have observed in the fine half-tone cuts of Mr. Schilling's which have appeared on a number of occasions within the past year. The White Wyandotte illustration in Rock Hill Poultry Farm's advertisement which appeared in our last week's issue, is a fine sample of what can be accomplished in this direction. Mr. Latham has done some superior photographic work in retouching and printing Barred Plymouth Rocks, all of which fills and pleases the eye and lacks the stiffness of line drawings or ideal sketches. People are being educated up to this class of illustrations and it will be difficult to go back to the old style in the future. When we compare the stiff products of the engravers' art as applied to poultry cuts twenty years ago with the modern work of such artists as Sewel, Schilling, Graham and others, the wonderful advancement is readily apparent. To strive for the highest ideal of the photographers' art is what is now desired. And the American Poultry association is in a position to lead in this work of higher and better illustrations, not only to grace its Standard but in the example such would set and the influence it would have on future pictures printed in the poultry journals.

COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.

We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

When one looks over the list of American originated varieties of fowls and considers the practical value they are and have been to the poultry interest as a whole, every American should feel proud of them.

Each and every one upon nearing mature age and ready for the table of the epicure, represents a dollar in value anywhere north and east of the Ohio river.

So much for the market side. As layers by the year there are few breeds that have anything on them on that score, and as far as a fancier's fowl the big prices paid by the reckless and opulent generally fall to them.

About the greatest pleasure that can come to a fancier, is the satisfaction he may take in filling an order when he knows he has the quality to send out.

If one hasn't the goods he cannot deliver them. A nice, well raised chick is the foundation on which to build up business.

A scrawny, debilitated and underfed bird is dear as a gift.

Someone might rise up and say the surroundings have much to do with the successful rearing of nice fowls, and granting such to be the case, it need be no bar. If the quarters will accommodate but four birds, don't crowd in six.

There is a wealth of scratching material in the falling leaves. It is profitable to store them also for future use.

We are planning a vast scratching arena to utilize the leaves and waste litter from the grain and corn fodder.

The farmyard does not seem to be quite full of hens at feeding time, so a house to accommodate three hundred more will be built between the present farm buildings, and on a level with the shed already erected. This will give a scratching ground three thousand feet square and ought to stimulate the scratching habit greatly. when covered deep with litter and grain thrown in it occasionally.

An important item, but little considered on either side, is the shipping coop. These cost anywhere from a quarter up to a dollar, according to the elaboration. To cover this cost, the fancier must make an extra charge.

The day of the muslin coop is past. The express companies say they are tired of chasing chickens. A compromise is to use the muslin for the sides, but nail a wide thin strip over it rather than to open slat part way up. The muslin protects the birds from drafts and saves them many scares in transit. They do not need to become the prey of the curious, either, or subject to the many pokes and jabs dealt out by those who handle them in transit.

An authority says there is great danger in overfeeding, and follows by stating a sufficient quantity is necessary or no profit will accrue therefrom.

It seems a happy medium must be employed, not too much or two little. The truth of the matter is, the feeder must keep his eyes open and be his own judge.

It is not supposed a flock will eat exactly alike every day, and the wise feeder increases or decreases according to the moods in which he finds his charge's appetites. Feed only what will be eaten without waste is a safe rule to follow.

SUFFIELD, CONN.

Oct. 2-3, 1906.

The poultry show was under the able and efficient management of John R. Jones, the veteran fancier and judge, who also judged the classes. There was quite a display of poultry this year and the quality of the exhibit was of the best. Mr. Jones had on exhibition a new breed originated by him, which he calls the "Charter Oaks." The new breed are of the Wyandotte type and are prettily mottled black and white, a characteristic of the mottling being the fact that the effect is produced by feathers of either solid black or white. The breed is rose combed and of the laying type as regards size and shape. Mr. Jones also had on exhibition Black Wyandottes, White Indian Games, Pit Games and other breeds.

Among the exhibition coops were also a coop of grand White Wyandottes exhibited by Fordham Russell and two pens of prize winning Rhode Island Reds, exhibited by Hiram Jones.

The awards, which gave universal satisfaction, were placed as follows:

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts last Saturday were 2,088 cases; for the week, 33,987; since March 1, 3,302,073. There were no attempts made last Saturday to further advance prices of fresh eggs. Although there is actual scarcity of the highest qualities enough useful stock is offered to meet the demand. There has been a heavy decrease in the receipts this week, and from all parts of the country reports state that collections are falling off rapidly. The shrinkage in the current receipts has enabled sellers to materially reduce accumulations of medium and under grades, which have been dragging for 10 days. Fine dirty eggs are scarce and wanted. Increased interest is noted in refrigerator eggs, and samples are being freely distributed, but there has been no improvement made in prices.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts last Saturday were 1,532 packages; for the week, 12,321. The market is gradually assuming its normal condition. Accumulations of old stock have been reduced by sales to canners and the storage of lots that were suited for freezing. The receipts for the week included several large lines of frozen stock. The offerings of fresh killed of choice quality were not burdensome. There were continual delays in the arrivals of shipments from the West. Some cars were three days behind schedule time. Spring turkeys are arriving more freely than last week, but there is a wide variation in quality and also prices. Western ducks, when choice, sell freely. Squabs are firmer.

WEED'S WANDERINGS.

A visit to Lenox, Mass., would not be complete without a visit to the yards of Thos. Briant, located on Christian Hill, (rather a suggestive name). We have good-natured "Tom" routed out of bed (for Tom is on the night police), and we go at once to inspect Tom's pets, Buff Rocks. The kind that win are good enough for this Knights of the Club. His Boston cockerel of last year bids fair to do the trick again, and certainly transmits his good qualities, for he sired 2d and 3d winners at the Great Brockton Fair just held. You will certainly hear from Tom and his stock at some of the coming winter shows.

Can you speak or think of Gloversville without thinking of old "Zim?" We called on him, found him a little stouter, a few more grey hairs, and just a few more crow's feet, but in all other respects the same, except perhaps that his talk has a little more dog than chicken in it. Well, we see the Bantams, and they make us break one of the Commandments, for we do "covet them". We saw several that came from "hover 'ome". They are certainly dandies—and Dogs!!! Well, if they only hatched them that way what an advertisement his place would be for some incubator firm. I hardly know whether the B. in his name stands for Beagle or Bantam.

We found that Mrs. Zimmer not only loves chickens and dogs, but has some thoroughbred cats as well, and if long hair is any indication of breeding—the goods can certainly be found here.

Here we get Barney Mosher on the 'phone, and make a date for the next day.

At Mosher Brothers, we find a farm as a farm should be—sheep, pigs, geese, ducks, chickens and all pure-bred, and all show their breeding and feed. And the dinner!—well, I have heard of "tables groaning," etc.; while there was never a groan, you get up feeling that the saying "The farmer feeds the world" is a fact.

After dinner, Barney gives us a fine drive to Fultonville, the home of the Empire Cooping Company, a plant, by the way, much larger than I expected to see, being some 160 feet long, two stories, and a storage capacity for 10,000 coops. Their latest orders were one from Chicago Cat Club for 500 cat coops, and one from Greeneville, S. C., for 500 standard coops. The firm report a good business, with numbers of engagements for this winter, cooping shows.

At Fultonville is found also the home of W. A. Fuller, who bred and advertised Dark Brahmas thirty-four years ago and still breeds and wins with them. He also breeds Buff Wyandottes, Barred Rocks and Houdans. Mr. Fuller shows what can be done in a small space by a certain amount of care and judgment.

Our next visit is to J. H. Scott, Secretary of the Auburn Fanciers' Association, who says that everything points to a very successful show this winter. A visit to the armory is proof that they have a fine, large and well-lighted hall in which to hold their exhibit.

But a short ride from Mr. Scott's yards are the yards of Gardner & Dunning. We were fortunate in finding Mr. Gardner home, for he is president of the Humane Society, which demands and gets a great deal of his time—but let me say right here that I have never seen a finer, healthier lot of young chickens than here. The place is almost ideal for shade and sunlight, having mostly pear and cherry orchards, which do not have the seeming dampness of an apple orchard. Their buildings are plain and practical. Their old fowl are coming through their moult in fine shape and the youngsters simply speak blue ribbon.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The ninth annual exhibition of The Cincinnati Poultry and Pet Stock Company will be held in the magnificent Music Hall building January 15th to 19th, inclusive. Messrs. E. T. Orr of Beaver, Pa., and Frank Heck of Chicago, I.., will assist in judging the poultry department and special arrangements will be made to handle the pigeon classes. The entry fees and the regular prizes will be the same as last year, viz:—Entry fee for single birds, $1.00; 1st prize $4.00, 2d prize $2.00. Entry fee for exhibition pens; $3; 1st prize $6, 2d prize $3. The extraordinary success of our show last year when we entertained the American Poultry Association will make it possible for us to put up the best line of cash specials that were ever offered, and special cash inducements will be offered to any of the clubs desiring to hold their meeting in Cincinnati. The deficiency in light, which caused some trouble in certain classes last year, will be remedied and there will be no complaint on that score this year. Our premium list will be ready for mailing about December 1st, and it will be sent upon application to The Cincinnati Poultry & Pet Stock Company, P. O. Box 122, Cincinnati, O.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

Editor American Fancier:

"History repeats itself" is a true saying. I was very much surprised to learn that the Secretary-Treasurer's bond was only dated October 1st. The old bond expired August 1st, I think, and unless there was a renewal for two months we were without a bond for two months, with the treasury full to overflowing. Not many moons ago, with the treasury empty, there was a great cry because there was no bond I am sorry the present Finance Committee did not tend to their business better than a former one. I would like to know if the Secretary-Treasurer was bonded for August and September, 1906?

RUTHERFORD
New Jersey

The twenty-fifth annual exhibition of the Poultry and Pigeon Association will be held at Providence, R. I., December 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, 1906. Entries close November 17th. This will be the first of the large winter shows, and we hope will be supported by all fanciers.

The Pigeon classes will be judged by Wm. J. Stanton and H. F. Davenport. Price money, $1.25 first, 75c second; V. H. C. and H. C. ribbons. The classification is on the same lines as Boston and New York. The following specials have been offered: $2.50 in gold for the best bird of the following varieties, Fantail, Pouter, Dragoon, Flying Homer.

Special ribbon for the best shaped Fantail, Pouter, Owl, Tumbler, Dragoon and Flying Homer.

Silver cup, value $25.00, for the best exhibit of Fantails.

Silver medal, offered by the Eastern Fantail Club of America, for the best White Fantail in the show.

Silver medal for the best Black Fantail in the show.

Silver medal for the best Saddleback Fantail in the show and silver medal for the best Blue, Red or Yellow or A. O. C. Fantail in the show, above medals to be competed for by members of the Eastern Fantail Club of America.

* * * * *

All the Fantail fanciers not members of the Fantail Club, who wish to compete for medals will be eligible by making application for membership to the secretary, together with initiation fee and one year's dues, amounting to $3.00.

* * * * *

The time is now drawing near when the birds must be ready for competition. Hemp seed should be given every few days, also iron in the drinking water. Don't be afraid to let all birds especially selected for the shows to have free access to the bath.

In looking over a few lofts during the past week, we find many not through the moult. To these fanciers we say, keep your birds in the warm until they have entirely finished and feed the best of sound old grain. Otherwise you will lose what chance you may have had. If success is to be gained in the show room the greatest care must be given the birds at this most critical time.

Washington is on the calendar with another show, as mentioned last week. This will be good news to many who remember the former Capital City exhibitions. Look up the dates and make arrangements to send a few.

The Pigeons at the second annual exhibition of the Paterson Poultry and Pigeon Association, to be held at League Hall, Paterson, N. J., will be judged by George Spohn. This show will be held December 5, 6, 7, and 8, 1906. Entries close November 19th.

A judge always feels most assured when he has given his awards from an honest conviction, without fear or favor, and regardless of the howls that may be raised. That show lasts longest and has the best results financially which keeps itself clearest of the chances of any suspicious jobbery.

Fanciers should always try and visit the show where they are represented. They can then judge for themselves, and we hope unbiased, how the awards have been given. Under most judges certain specimens will be changed at different times; it seems strange, but is nevertheless true.

During the last few years we believe the different Pigeon Associations have had too much of the same list of judges for the benefit of the Fancy in general, as well as the association itself. The few shows introducing a new and capable judge have always benefited by so doing.

To find a new and yet capable judge is of course no little task, but there are a few in most all varieties although never officiated in this capacity, are well qualified and would bring out a strong lot in their varieties. Most fanciers are always eager to send their entry when they know a new yet capable judge is going to place the awards.

White Plains, N. Y., is to have a winter exhibition, to be held some time in January. Who the judges are has not been announced as yet. The classification and prize money will be very liberal, and we understand the show will be up-to-date in all departments. White Plains is in a very good location and we see no reason why a most excellent show cannot be held annually.

Don't forget the extra list of specials offered on Fantails at Providence. Twenty-five dollar solid silver cup and four solid silver medals on Fantails should bring out a great entry in these classes. For premium list, address Wm. I. Brown, Sec'y, No. 6 Exchange Place, Providence, R. I.

The Fantail cup at Providence Show will be competed for by points. 6 points for first, 4 points for second, 2 points for third and 1 point for fourth.

Messrs. A. J. Edwards and G. F. Erbe will handle the stick in the Pigeon aisles at Pittsburg February 18-23, 1907. For premium list, address G. C. Sutch, Sec'y, Pittsburg, Pa.

SHOW TIPPLERS.

Having read with much interest your correspondent's experiences of the Brander in our Show Tippler, I hope a few remarks from my pen will not be out of place, considering I was the first to exhibit the much admired color at Ecclesfield Show. I believe it was in 1900, and where I was first. I I have not yet forgotten how the bird was admired for his brightness and evenness of color by the Sheffield fanciers. They were astounded. I was asked times without number if I would sell him. He was, in my opinion, the best of this cross I have ever seen. He was short in feather, full, but round head, white eye, and had a jet black beak, a point sadly lost in so many good show birds. His fault was a rather red stained cere. At this time no one in the Tippler Fancy but myself, and, I believe, Mr. Yoe, knew about them. The bird in question I sold to Mr. Yoe, with what results from a breeding point of view I just forget now. When I was in Swansea I did see some Selfs Mr. Yoe bred this way, but their fault was long in face and narrow raky bodies.; otherwise, they had nice type, rich even color, with white eye, black beak, and fair ceres. Most of them, too, were solid in color underneath—a good point. I notice your correspondents failed to breed from their Branders. I tried to breed both dark and light Mottles from them, but, as regards the lights, with poor results the first season, but I really believe if I had plodded on another season, mated up as I had intended, I should have had good results. I could breed dark Mottles fairly solid under, sound in face, and well marked, with raky bodies. I regretted very much, however, when I had to sell out, and my birds went all over the country into different fanciers' hands. I am, however, again trying a Self Brander cock and a light Mottle hen of the blue print stamp for shape and markings, one of the old school, which we don't see very often. On the one hand I have color in my favor, on the other shape and markings. I am hoping my results will be satisfactory. I have proved by this kind of mating to breed good show birds. I do not believe in breeding from a lot of birds mated up anyhow. I spend hours thinking over how this good point should counteract this bad one, and so on, and out of a few pairs of birds so judiciously mated, I have bred better show birds than fanciers that have been breeding from six times the number of birds. I admit, however, I have been often deceived then with the results, but am pleased to say I have occasionally been rewarded. I quite agree with Mr. Williams as to Mr. Yeo's success with the cross, so far as Selfs go. I saw practically every bird bred by Mr. Yeo. I am, however, firmly convinced that some of our foremost breeders have this blood stamped in their birds. To a certain extent the cross has been good. Some would like to know to what extent and where to draw the line in breeding from the Brander. I will try to explain, in my opinion, the likely birds to breed from, to attain success. In the first place, I will take it you intend to go in for dark Mottle breeding. I should get a Brander cross cock, with a good round shaped head. Mind he is not flat skulled, a great fault in many of our show birds to-day. Especially is this the case with light Mottles; white eye, fine black cere, solid black beak. This cross seems to breed very true to color, but not as sound to vent as is wanted. Mind, he is uniform in color, carrying a dark tip to tail, otherwise your efforts will be in vain. If you can trust him to be mottle bred so much the better. Such reliability you can get from some breeders. His partner must be rich in color, sound, even throughout, although she may be a shade dark it does not matter. I like a chestnut brown hen to breed from. It puts depth of color into the progeny. The two combined tone down the brightness of color, and give uniformity. This I have learnt from one of our most prominent self Tumbler breeders. Never mate birds up both possessing same good points and bad ones. What scores on the one hand counteracts on the other, and I am sure young fanciers will have better results. See the hen is well marked to bar if possible. Mind she has white marking on a solid ground color. That is what we must breed to, and not as so many of our winnings birds are, on a white ground with colored markings. If she has some slightly white feathers in her face and neck, never mind. The cock can breed these faults out the first cross. Such has been my experience of dark Mottle breeding. I well remember one of our oldest and best breeders, Mr. W. French, telling me some years ago, he always mated for dark mottle breeding rich color on the cock side, shape, and neatness of carriage, combined with markings on the hen's side. I cannot quite follow my friend, Mr. Williams, where he says, "Buy birds three or four years old, and you will be sure to get birds of this age with good color." The time has not come, only in very rare cases, that birds of the age he names have the brown color left in their tails and body. It only shows what they were as yearlings by looking at their flight feathers. There is, though, a certain amount of truth in what Mr. W. says. Three or four years ago the Brander had not been crossed into them. Now it is possible to get good, rich colored dark Mottles that have the Brander in them. I defy the best and most experienced fancier to tell me where, when, at what stage the Brander was crossed into our birds. Why, at Hanley Show, fully three parts of the young darks had Brander cross in them, but noticeable only to those who can trace their pedigree for years, know the breeders and all about them. Therefore, I say, the Brander has been an improvement upon our dark Mottles, both as regards placing, brightness, and uniformity of color. Sounder bars have also been produced than formerly. It is so difficult to get rich color without getting washy colored bars. This fault has been improved upon by many dark Mottle breeders. I will, at some near future, give my opinion on Branders for light Mottle breeding. At present I am not sweet on them crossed this way. I wish it to be understood there are quite as good colored dark Mottles about that have no Brander in them as ever there were, but this cross, properly mated, is, and has been, an improvement in our dark Mottles. It is all very well for a fancier to say I have no Brander in my birds that I know of. There he speaks with a certain amount of cautiousness. I don't see any disgrace in anyone owning up that they have Brander in their birds, even if the result has not been satisfactory. There is not doubt our Show Tipplers of to-day have been bred from a variety of crosses, as I stated in my previous correspondence in your columns. I could astonish come of your readers as to the way the present day Show Tippler has been produced. It is the old tale. Bring out a new improvement, and everybody cries it down for a while. Yet they all come back to it again. We must advance with the times.—J. E. Plant, Southport, in Pigeons & Poultry.

BREEDING SHOW HOMERS.

A few words on breeding show Homers and the kind of stock to breed from. Many amateurs often fail to produce good young birds owing to injudicious mating of the old ones. They pair two pairs together because both are well chequered, irrespective of head properties. Perfect chequering is desirable in chequered birds, but show points should not be neglected for color. Color is a secondary consideration. It is always advisable to breed from good stout-headed birds, short in feather, and not from small-headed ones, for the latter are certain to breed birds having heads shorter than themselves. Many fanciers pair a long-headed cock with a hen having a head of average length; the progeny are then almost sure to have heads of average size, and should they turn out to be the correct type so much the better. For breeding color.—To produce black and blue chequers, pair a black-chequer with a blue-chequer, the result will then be young of both colors in about equal proportion; it is not always advisable to pair black-chequers together, as the young so produced often lack chequering on the wings, though they may be well chequered on the thighs and belly. For red-chequers it is as well to occasionally introduce a black-chequer in the mating, the result being that a deeper and better colored red will be imparted to the young red-chequers so bred. To produce silver-chequers, a blue-chequer cock may be mated with a silver-chequer hen, or a black-chequer cock with a mealy hen, the former being the usual method. Blues should be paired together, also mealies, but should either be getting too light in color on the neck or bars, pair with birds having deep-colored necks and very dark bars. The food of the show Homer during breeding season should be small tick beans, maple peas, plump barley, tares, and a little maize last thing in the afternoon. During the show season the staple food should be tick beans, maple peas, and a little barley. —Feathered World.

Always rub the feathers down the right way whilst the bird is drying.

Always wash the bird at least two days before sending off, because there is then time for the plumage to resume its usual glossy appearance.

Always see that show labels are properly addressed for the return journey; many are very careless in this respect, and it is a wonder that some hampers get back at all.

Always do any little odd jobs that want doing at once. "Procrastination is the thief of time," and often a nail here or a tack there will save half-an-hour's work.

Always buy your food in as large a quantity as possible, as you will then generally be able to get it at a cheaper rate.

Always keep a strict account of all you buy or sell. By treating your hobby in a thoroughly business manner, you will derive greater pleasure by seeing how much profit you have earned.

Always insist on the deposit system when sending birds on approval to strangers.

Always be particular when writing a description of what you have to sell to a would-be purchaser; this often saves a lot of unpleasantness.

Always remember that promptness in replying to letters is the way to secure customers.

Always send a bird in a secure package when going on approval, as intending buyers like to receive the birds in good order.

Always insist on having birds on approval when buying for yourself.

Always bear in mind (and this is the last reminder we shall give you) that by continually advertising you bring your name before the public, and thereby build up a substantial business.

Always keep a sharp lookout for vermin, and eradicate them as quickly as possible.

Always have plenty of ventilation at the top of the fowlhouse.

Always take the lining out of the exhibition hampers at this time of year, and have them well washed. We mean both baskets and lining.

Always wash the birds going to show yourself. Never trust this operation to others.

Always wash the head and comb last; do all other parts first, and finish off at the upper story.

Always rinse the birds well with warm, and then with nearly cold water; by thus doing all the soap will be got out of the feathers, otherwise the feathers will dry badly, and look anything but nice.

Always thoroughly wash the birds; a half-washed pigeon looks awful.

POULTRY SUCCESS

Are the kind that other people do the talking about, so that it is only necessary for us to give a few of the many examples we can show, to prove that money invested in space in our columns

BRINGS BIG RETURNS.

The demand for stock this season calls for all varieties, and present indications promise that the entire surplus will find a good paying market before the season is over. Read what others say who use Poultry Success.

Poultry Success Gives Him all the Orders He Can Fill.

I am getting all the orders I can fill now. I am very well satisfied with Poultry Success as an advertising medium. J. VIGRASS.
April 21, 1906. Erie, Pa.

Gave Him Good Results.

Poultry Success gave me good returns on the sale of stock. A. H. BETTS,
April, 23, 1906. Dayton, Ohio.

Poultry Success Brought Most Inquiries.

It might interest you to know how Poultry Success stood on our list last season. While some of the mediums came up to last year, we find on direct traceable returns, that Poultry Success cost less per inquiry and sale, than any other Poultry Journal and that it ranked first in number of inquiries received and third in number of sales received. It will surely go on our list again this season.

BUCKEYE INCUBATOR COMPANY.

WE WANT NAMES

We want YOU to send us the names and addresses of from ten to twenty-five persons living in the United States, each one having twenty-five hens or more. You can send us the names from any number of different postoffices. If you will send us these names we will send you TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES FREE. These pictures are reproductions of the most celebrated paintings in the world, and they are of high quality, and we know that you will be pleased and delighted with them; no pictures will be given for a list of less than ten names.

We want to send a free sample copy of a special issue of the HOME MONTHLY (The National Poultry Journal), to a lot of poultry raisers who are not now taking our paper and for that reason we want these names.

Send us immediately a list of at least ten poultry raisers and we will mail you, postpaid, ABSOLUTELY FREE, TWO REPRODUCTIONS OF THE WORLD'S FAMOUS PICTURES, beautiful colors, size 15x20 inches. Address: THE HOME MONTHLY, 20 North William St., New York.

THE JACOBIN STANDARD

By John Waters, Belfast, Ireland.

It is with much pleasure that I give you my views on the proposed revision of the Jacobin Standard, and, as I had a leading part in drawing up the present one, I am rather surprised that any change should be asked for.

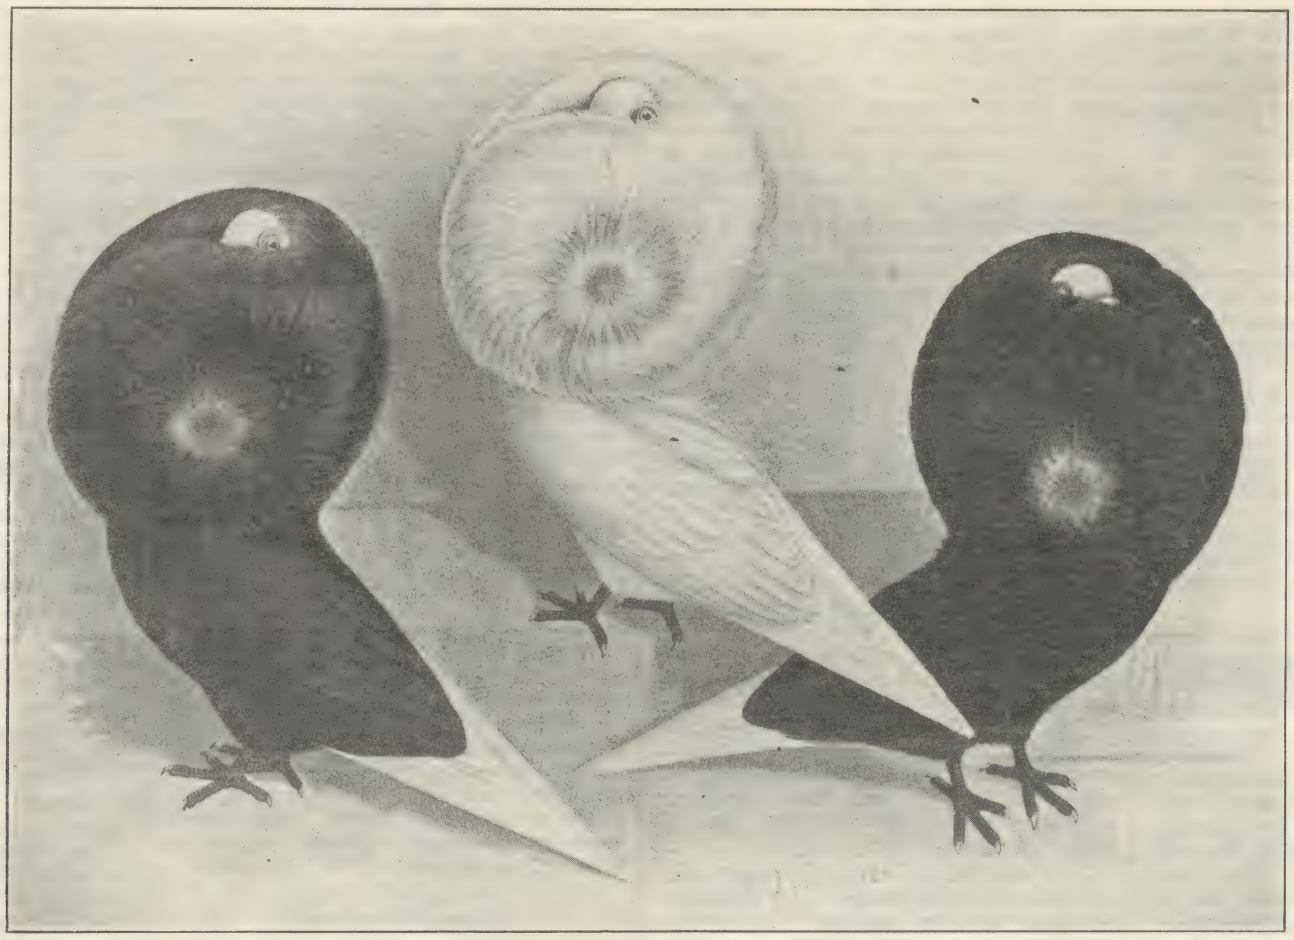
This standard was adopted only after very careful thought by the leading breeders in the British Isles, men who had bred Jacobins for many years, and every point was thoughtfully considered and discussed before being adopted.

A pigeon standard in my opinion is only a guide as to the value a breeder is to attach to the several points that are valuable in any particular variety, and to enable him to see what is most important in breedering, for to attempt to judge a bird with so many complicated points as the Jacobin, by figures, is an impossibility.

From the various opinions given in the discussion that has taken place in "The Pigeon News", I am led to think that what is wanted is a thoughtful interpretation of our present standard, rather than a revision. I will accordingly take each point in rotation and give my views upon each.

It is well to see that all the writers agreed that hood is the most important point of all, and, while this is so it must not be deemed everything, as the tendency is at the present time, and hood must not be obtained at the expense of chain or mane, but be in full harmony with these most important points. There is great danger that the tendency to exaggerate the hood will spoil the depth of the chain, for at our shows here many specimens having what is called "a big hood" have very short chains, and with some of our judges the chain is sacrificed to the other points.

I see one writer speaks of a "globular hood" and this shows a great lack of observation and want of Jacobin experience, for by no stretch of imagination can a true Jacobin have a "globular hood". If such a hood is seen it must of necessity be accompanied by a poor mane and improper carriage. A big hooded bird is most valuable as a stock bird, but can never be considered a show bird, unless its chain and mane are in proportion to the hood.



"Chain" is the next point, and here I am at variance with those writers who would place such a beautiful and difficult point after mane. I have bred Jacobins for about thirty years, and the longer I breed them the more I am convinced that chain is the more important point of the two and presents far more difficulty to obtain in perfection than the mane, and apart from this difficulty, who would consider a Jacobin a first-class specimen if its chain were either open, or ragged and full of gaps, no matter how perfect it is in all other points? Take the most perfectly hooded and maned bird that can be thought of, and if it is the least trifle open in chain nine out of ten fanciers will condemn it. Chain gives constant trouble to breed right, but mane gives none whatever to anyone who understands Jacobin breeding.

In my breeding operations I have after sacrificed mane or trusted to luck for it, knowing that I could regain it with one cross any time I wanted it, but I can never take such a liberty with chain for if I do, it will take me years to recover it again. It is a point that needs constant care to keep, and even with such care it will not come always, but mane will come quite easily.

Another argument I may use, although not a very strong one, and that is, let anyone take a really good Jacobin in hand, the hood and chain can be seen and admired to perfection, but the mane is lost and its beauty quite obscured. The chain to be proper should be very low and deep toward the breast, and be perfectly close from the beak all the way down, forming a sort of bow at the meeting of the two sides and lying close to the eyes or cheeks of the bird.

One writer suggests that if you have a good hood and mane, the chain may be cut off and there will still be a good Jacobin. This is utter nonsense and the man who wrote it would be the first to reject the best hooded and maned Jacobin in the world if it were so deficient in chain.

Now while I so strongly advocate chain, I must have a good mane to make a good bird, and I concede that it is a most beautiful and taking point, but it is apt to greatly mislead superficial observers by taking their attention from the faults that generally follow a good mane, viz: a short hood or an open chain, for it is impossible to have more than a moderate mane without one of these faults being present with it.

IDEAL JACOBINS.

A. F. Lyden.—From Feathered World.

Mane, like the hood and chain must be in proportion to the bird, and if it is the least bit exaggerated, one or other of the above points must suffer. I have seen many birds with too much mane, but I have never met one with too much chain. The description of the mane in the standard is, I think, quite correct, although Mr. Eby takes exception to the words "thin even line", and asks "how thin"? Now in treating of these principal points of the Jacobin, I assume that everyone is aware that they must be both long and thick in feather, for a thin feathered bird is never considered a good one, but in the thickest and heaviest feathered bird the feathers forming the mane must end in a thin line at the ridge; if it does not so end, the mane goes over the side, which is a very bad fault. I would be willing, however, to concede that the word "thin" might be deleted from the standard and no harm would result. It would then read, "springing from the back in an even line, forming a junction with the hood."

The rose does not seem to be questioned by any writer, so it must be taken as agreed to, and the two points given to it in the standard remain. I see that in one suggested standard both "rose" and "size" are unmentioned, and given no points whatever, a very curious omission, surely..

Head and beak are very important points and require a great deal of attention from the breeder, and if some of the present fanciers could remember the very objectionable long, thin heads and faces we once had on the Jacobin they would be more ready to put greater value on a good headed bird than they are now disposed to do. It took years of careful breeding to obtain our present fairly good heads and I would greatly deplore any reduction in the figures allotted to these points. A nice beak of medium thickness, nicely set pointing down into the chain combined with a broad frontal well rounded off gives a very high bred look to any bird possessing them.

I am afraid that in the rush for hood, head and beak are being neglected by breeders, for at recent shows I have seen several birds with very objectionable faces, and I am inclined to think the fault is increasing. Any serious recurrence to the ugly faces I remember once to be so prevalent would be nothing short of a calamity to our fancy.

The next is the eyes, and here there is evidently some misapprehension on the part of some of the correspondents. The standard gives two points to the eyes, and expressly states they are to be "pearl or white". There is no mention of "bull eyes"—accordingly all birds with this fault should be relegated to the stock classes, the same as if they had foul tails or had one entire foul feathered wing.. The two points allowed in the standard are to show the value of a clear pearl eye over a clouded or dull one, and in no way covers the blemish of a "bull eye," for it is as fundamental a principle that the Jacobin should have clear pearl eyes as it is that it should have a white head and tail.

Carriage is to my view a most important point and one I must have before I consider a bird a good Jacobin, for it is the great decider of the position a show specimen is to take in the prize list. No matter how good a bird may be in every point that goes to make a Jacobin, if it has not proper carriage it cannot display them to advantage. But, while I concede this, I must point out that carriage is not a point peculiar to the Jacobin alone, but is shared by many other varieties of pigeons, therefore carriage, however important it is, must never be placed before the points of the Jacobin that are possessed by it only, viz: hood, chain, mane and marking.

It should be remembered that carriage gives little or no trouble to obtain, for it is only necessary to avoid breeding from any bird that shows timidity or sulkiness, or has a low crouching habit of carrying itself, and it should also be observed that very high carriaged birds if they are cocks, are very seldom breeders. It is not enough for a bird to pull itself up and show when stirred up with a judging stick, for a Jacobin with true carriage should be always showing when approached in daylight. I consider the eight points given to carriage in the standard cannot be improved upon, for to put such an easily obtained point before any of the great features of the breed, such as hood, chain or mane, would betray a great want of Jacobin experience. In all varieties the main features must always be placed before those shared by others in common, and this principle must always be kept in view by anyone undertaking the office of judge of live stock.

The markings of a Jacobin are peculiar to the breed, no other pigeon being exactly similar, although the Baldhead Tumbler is marked in the same way except on the thighs, which are white, while a Jacobin's thighs must be the same color as the body. It is this very point that gives all the trouble in producing standard Jacobins, for if white thighs were admitted then it would be very easy to have the desired ten white feathers in each wing, and we would have no trouble with grizzled flight feathers or thighs, and the color question would also be solved at once. But the Jacobin would not then be the high class bird it is now, for it would be too easily bred, and there would not be the keen incentive to overcome difficulties that is now needed in a good Jacobin breeder.

Considering all the difficulties that are involved in the breeding of a well marked bird combined with general excellence in other birds, I think the ten points allotted in the standard are none too many, although I see one writer would allow only six, and another eight, whilst both place color before it. Do these fanciers consider that in breeding for marking we must aim at four separate things, viz: Very high cutting of head, ten white flight feathers in each wing, dark thighs and white tail. All these must be bred for, and a failure in one of them puts that particular specimen a very big step backwards. On the other hand, we have only the one thing to consider in breeding for color, and we may fail somewhat in our efforts, but if the birl we get is good in all other Jacobin points the slight failure in color will be little detriment to it. How then can we place what only involves one operation, if I may so term it, over another point requiring four separate considerations, failure in any one of which is fatal?

It is very much easier to breed well marked blacks than reds, and reds easier than yellows, and as one correspondent says, very many beautiful blacks can be bred, well marked in every way, combined with excellence in other points also, but we seldom see reds sound on thighs, and unfortunately when they are seen they are not appreciated as they ought to be, but this should be treated under the question of color, which is a very charming point to me, and one that here does not obtain the importance it ought to do.

Color must always be subordinate to marking, but comes very close up to it in difficulty of production, and in reds and yellows we have a very large task yet before us before we produce many standard specimens in these colors. Blacks, as remarked already, are more easily bred true to color and marking, but reds are seldom sound on thighs. A few cocks are occasionally bred grand in color to thighs, but all the red hens ever seen equally colored could be counted on the fingers and have a finger or two left. Yellows are even worse, and this is the most difficult color of all to breed. In both these colors no bird with all the secondaries of sound color has yet been seen, nor do I expect to see such a one in my lifetime, but it would be a curiosity to see a black that was not sound colored in all wing feathers, for this reason, all other things being about equal, reds should be placed before blacks and yellows before both. It would not be desirable, however, to alter either the points for marking and color on account of this, for there are always some other important matters that enable a judge to decide which is the better specimen.

Size, I see, is not much questioned, but I prefer a small one if good in feather properties, and never object to a good one even if a little on the large side, for these big ones are often extra good in length of feather.

Shape of body requires no comment, except to say that the slender bird we now have in plenty was not always to be had, for at one time very many were broad shouldered and short in length of flights and tail, making a coarse, heavy bird not at all nice to look at. Now and then such a specimen is bred still, so I would like to preserve the points alloted to size, etc.

Legs and feet give us no difficulty now, but in my early days many specimens were bred feathered down the shanks, some so heavily as to be almost "grouse footed", but this is a thing of the past, I hope, althought it took a good many years to breed it out. Whites were the most addicted to this fault, and a few feathers are still to be seen on the legs of a white occasionally.

I have now gone through all the standard, and I think before we talk of aftering it we should try our best to produce Jacobins to come near it and not to attempt to alter the standard to suit our birds. We have plenty of work before us yet and I can see no reason for any change, except in one particular that has not yet been touched upon, and if any change is decided upon I would respectfully ask earnest consideration to the point of "quality of feather"—I mean by this that the feathers forming the hood, chain or mane should be thick, smooth and even, free from all roughness or irregularity, and I would value this at three points, taking two from head and beak and one from size to allow for this being added to the standard.

In this country we find no necessity to alter the standard, for we have not yet been able to breed our birds up to it, and until we do so the present standard is good enough for many years. I would therefore urge the members of the American Jacobin Club to let well alone, breed their birds to the standard and not try to alter it to suit the birds.

COMMUNICATED.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 11, 1906.
Ed. Am. Fancier, N. Y.:

Voting slips for the election of officers and place of annual meeting of The American Pigeon Club for 1907 were sent out and a large number have been returned. In my note to the members inclosed with each vote, Mr. A. B. Hoskins' name was erroneously given as "A. B. Hopkins." I sincerely regret that I did not notice it until many of them had gone out. I apologize to our old friend and hope I have not opened the way for two jobs for him. However, it is a "cinch" he gets one, for anything that looks like Hospins, Hopkins or any other old "kins" goes to the only A. B. H. I hope the members will all get their votes in immediately. As soon as they are all received I will give out the result, but I can't do so while one is lacking.

If the members knew how anxious one particular editor in Massachusetts is I know they would hasten. Why he is so impatient that he changed the constitutional voting time from November to October and has been wondering when he would get his slip since the first of that month. He says others were wondering, too. Well, may be, but they did not wonder into print.

The board of directors of the Columbia Poultry and Pigeon Association of Washington, D. C., at their last meeting took up and considered every necessary point of organization and pertaining to a show. It was decided to incorporate with fully paid up stock. It all having been subscribed practically at the first meeting, that is, by those present, or by proxy, or by those who were unable to attend. The necessary committees were appointed for the several branches of work to be done and all are expected to report at the next meeting which will probably be this week. Quite a number of very desirable specials have been offered unsolicited, and when the "beggars" strike their gait the fancy may look for a few automobiles, steam yachts, diamonds, country residences, etc., etc., in our prize list, which by the way, is under full headway and will appear early next month.

To those who are unfamiliar with the municipal government of the District of Columbia, I would say that it is composed of three Commissioners, and if any one of the three men ever had a community of poultry and pigeon fanciers "up in the air," these same commissioners did that trick last week. Some bunch of dyspeptics or otherswise afflicted individuals suddenly discovered that roosters crow, hens cackle and pigeons fly, or do some other remarkable stunts and applied to the Commissioners to stop them or remove them. The result was a public hearing which is described in the following clipping from The Washington Post:

CHICKENS' MERITS PRAISED.

Friends of Domestic Fowls Rally to Defense Before Commissioners.

Arguments for and against chicken-raising in the District were heard by the Board of Commissioners yesterday morning, when the owners of fowls and their enemies voiced vigorously their conflicting opinions.

The regulation under consideration provides that no person shall keep any kind of live fowl or pigeons in any square having 75 per cent. of its territory improved, without securing a permit from the health officer and the consent of residents within 100 feet of the boundaries of the premises. It does not apply to fowls or pigeons confined in coops in places of business.

Dr. Dorsey McPherson, who first brought the subject to the attention of the District officials in a definite manner, was the first speaker in favor of the proposed regulation. He declared that the keeping of chickens in confined spaces produces unsanitary conditions, and that chicken coops are as great nuisances as stables.

Fred B. Coville opposed the regulation, on the ground that it would deprive children of their most lucrativ and enjoyable industry. He suggested that residents be allowed to keep a small number of hens on their property, providing they confine them in a closed building until a certain hour in the morning.

Those who spoke in favor of the regulation were: Charles C. Swisher, of the Cosmos Club; J. J. Georges, W. H. Wanamaker, 1015 Monroe street, Anacostia; C. E. Wright, and O. B. Lesner. Against the proposed regulation appeared J. S. Easby-Smith, Charles F. Diggs, representing the retail grocers; Dr. Charles Allen, 917 G street; W. E. Ambrose, representing the Homing club; A. M. Keane, 1634 Newton street; W. J. Howard, P. F. Suter, W. C. Downs, Harry E. Gladman, Rev. D. E. Wiseman, William Andrews, William E. Desman, and F. E. Mitchell.

The Commissioners said that they would solicit written suggestions and amendments to the proposed regulation before taking definite action.

I am inclined to take this as favorable action, and that the present police regulation, that were poultry a nuisance, that particular case will be investigated and if the complaint is sustained, the nuisance will be removed. When the written suggestions are called for by the Commissioners, The Columbia P. & P. Assn. will endeavor to set forth that poultry and pigeons are nothing more nor less than parlor ornaments and it is only the unintelligent and uncultured who can possibly be without them.

Respectfully,
E. C. DUFFY.

SECRETARY LONG'S DEFENCE.

Editor American Fancier:

In your issue of September 29th, over the signature of J. H. Drevenstedt, I find an article complimentary to the Westchester Poultry Association, in all of which I full concur. The article also refers to Mr. Harries in complimentary terms, but very uncomplimentary to myself.

Before attacking a person in public print the writer should be sure of his facts. Mr. Drevenstedt was the judge of poultry at our recent Westchester County Fair and evidently was imposed upon. In his article referred to the Poultry department he says, "It was the most mixed up mess we have ever seen at a first class fair". to all of which I fully agree, but in the next paragraph he places the responsibility on me, as follows:

"It was naturally supposed that Secretary Harries of the Poultry Show would have full charge of everything, but it seems the very-much-in-evidence Secretary Long was the whole shooting match." He delayed ordering the coops until the very last minute, etc. Who did Mr. Drevenstedt do his business with before and at the fair? Certainly not with Mr. Long. Did he see Mr. Long at any time interfering? Who told him that Mr. Harries did not have full charge, and that Mr. Long was the whole shooting match? Who told him that Mr. Long delayed until the very last minute the ordering of the coops? There is absolutely no foundation for the above insinuations and charges.

As a matter of fact the Westchester Poultry Association had full control; that association put Mr. Harries in charge, and he managed the Poultry department from the beginning. My only function before the fair was to receive the entries, take out the entrance money and turn over the entries to Mr. Harries, which I did daily. I did not keep the list and in no way interfered with him. I did, however, get nervous and urged him to order the coops before he did. I had no entries, how could I order coops? I did not know how many coops were needed, or the size.

The article again says: "Members of the Westchester Poultry Club were highly indignant over the treatment received at the hands of Secretary Lond and did not hesitate to say so." Will Mr. Drevenstedt name some of the members who were indignant and specify what they said and why they said it. The cause for all the "mixed up mess" is well known, and could just as well have been avoided had good judgment been used.

The article again says: "To an impartial observer it looks as if Secretary Long prefers the old style show." Does Mr. Drevenstedt class himself as an "impartial observer" when from mere one-sided heresay and observation of a bad state of facts he jumps to the conclusion that I was the cause, and without giving me any chance to defend myself writes an article that goes broadcast? For Mr. Drevenstedt's information I will state that it was upon my recommendation that the Board of Managers placed the Poultry Department under the management of the Westchester Poultry Association and agreed to hire coops. When Mr. Drevenstedt gets the real facts as to Mr. Long he will find that he is not a back number, but up to date. It takes work to accomplish ends and one cannot wait until it is time to eat before looking where it is to come from, neither can one accomplish much work if he waits until nine o'clock to commence.

E. B. LONG.

White Plains, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1906.

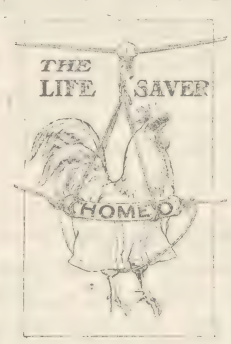
[In line with the policy of The American Fancier to giv everyone a square deal, we publish Mr. Long's communication. Exhibitors, members and some of the officers supplied us with the information that lead to the criticisms referred to by Mr. Long.—Editor American Fancier.]

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

The writer was surprised at the quality of the Cochin stock in the yards of D. C. Peoples, Uhrichsville, Ohio. Only breeding pens are kept in town, all young stock being farm-raised. The young stock already is fully large enough for the time of the year. Mr. People has been a winner at Boston, New York, Pittsburg and Western shows, and has recently shipped exhibition specimens to England for the Norwich Show. All his three varieties are well-shaped, the Blacks being free from purple, the White pure white and the Partridge simply grand in pencilling.

Everybody in the Central States knows Phil Feil, Canal Dover, Ohio, and his string of Buff Rocks. Mr. Feil has bred this variety and strain for the past fourteen years, and has been very successful as a showman. He has a lot of well-matured stock on hand.

Mr. Alex. Robinson, Uhrichsville, Ohio, while a very busy man, took the time to show the writer his fine flock of White Rocks. When Mr. Robinson took up this variety about seven years ago, he bought for foundation stock the best that money could buy. Since that time, he has been constantly improving his flock so that he goes in to the show room with all odds in his favor as a winner. He has now in his yards, winners at Indianapolis, Hagerstown, Pittsburg and Chicago, and also his winners at many of the smaller shows. His stock is white, and very strong in head points.



A sight that would interest any fancier is the Dayton (Ohio) Bird Store, owned by Chas. A. Lamb. His stock does not consist mainly of supplies, as does that of many bird stores, but is complete in fancy and rare birds, small animals and dogs. The dog department looks like a small bench show. What surprised the writer was the good condition of the stock, as regards health, but Mr. Lamb says the business has been so brisk that stock is moved quickly, and everything is sold before they begin to feel the effect of close confinement in the store. A specialty is made of high-grade dogs.

One of the nicest plants in Ohio is the K. G. at Circleville, Ohio, owned by George M. Haswell. It is located on a high banks, facing one of the rivers, and the stock consists exclusively of high-grade White Wyandottes. The breeding houses are of the well-known Hunter plan, and the brooding is done in outside brooders. The young stock has fine range over river bottum, and broom corn fields. Mr. Haswell is enlarging his plant, and will seel males only this fall. I knew this gentleman was popular among the fanciers who knew him, but did not know that he was serving his third term as mayor of his city. This speaks well of his popularity at home. One of his neighbors told me they kept on electing him because he was George Haswell, not because of his politics.

THE LIFE SAVER POULTRY BOOK.

A 32-page book on the care of poultry is now being distributed by Cugley & Mullen, and it is one of the most valuable books ever offered. The author is evidently familiar with the disease of poultry and has undoubtedly struck the right chord in prescribing a remedy for each disease. At least it appears to us as one of the best methods, as it is very difficult to treat several diseases with one remedy.

The "Life Saver" book describes minutely the symptoms of each malady and prescribes the proper remedy and treatment for each.

The "Homeo" remedies sold by Cugley & Mullen are put up in homeopathic tablets which are placed in the drinking water, thereby eliminating the old method of pouring medicine down the fowl's throat. The value of letting the bird take its own medicine cannot be over-estimated, as few, if any of us, are willing to spend time and trouble to treat a fowl day after day, unless it should be of particular value.

"The Life Saver" contains many suggestions that will prove valuable to every one who raises chickens, pigeons, ducks, turkeys or geese. There is also valuable information about housing, feeding and brooding of poultry.

The "Life Saver" is a copyrighted book and can be had only from Cugley & Mullen, Philadelphia, Pa., to whom all inquiries should be addressed. The book is sent free to all who are interested in poultry raising.

Scores of valuable specials, besides regular cash premium of $1.50, 1st; $1, 2nd; $.50, 3rd, on an entry fee of $.50.

That is the inducement the boys of Danbury, Conn., are holding out to you for their eleventh annual show, December 5-8, 1906.

We do not claim to be the only show on earth, and we do not claim to give out cash, and then say our show was a failure and could not pay.

What we claim is this: We have the cash to pay now. We never had a bird lost or go astray. We never had exhibitors go home dissatisfied. We always pay all the premiums at the show if you are there to take them. Checks sent within three days of closing to exhibitors, who do not attend the show. The best judges money can hire. Send for Premium List, and send in your entries to as well an equipped show as there is in America.

6 Exchange Place, Providence, R. I.

The premium list of the Johnstown Show is ready and will be mailed to all intending exhibitors sending their address to B. W. Mosher, Secretary, Johnstown, New York. This is the eighth exhibition held by the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock Club and promises to equal, if not surpass, all others that have made Johnstown famous as a poultry show city. The list of specials is very large and valuable. The judges are the same that placed the ribbons in years gone by, even the old veteran, F. B. Zimmer, coming out of his retirement to do one more judicial stunt for "Auld Lang Syne's" sake.

Here is a sample of the news handed out to correspondents of the big dailies by the Agricultural Department:

"New Yorkers can no longer eat fresh eggs under the delusion that they are a pure article of food. Even before the proud hen cackles it is liable to contain bad germs, according to intelligence communicated to produce men in this city by the scientific experts of the Department of Agriculture at Washington.

Secretary Wilson has sent out word, officially, that even the freshest eggs may, under certain conditions, cause illness by communicating some bacterial disease or some parasite.

"It is possible," he says, "for an egg to become infected with micro-organisms, either before it is laid, or after. The shell is porous and offers no greater resistance to micro-organisms which cause disease than it does to those which cause the egg to spoil. When the infected egg is eaten raw the micro-organisms, if present, are communicated to man, and may cause disease."

The typhoid fever germs, the Agricultural Department says, may attach themselves to the hen's feet or feathers and may then penetrate the egg before it is hatched. The egg of worms, as well as grains and seeds, are found in eggs, having made their way there while the white and the shell were being added to the yolk, in the egg gland of the fowl.

Pasteurizing the hens, and then subjecting them to X-rays, is the next step toward the germless egg."

A well-known caterer in New York City when he read the above in his favorite paper remarked to us: "What is the use of disseminating such stuff. Eggs are the breakfast food of thousands of people and it seems poor judgment to influence the people against them by such far fetched scientific researches."

There are bad eggs no doubt, but we believe there are none as dangerous as Secretary Wilson tries to make us believe. An egg is usually laid by a healthy fowl and may be safely eaten without any danger to health, when perfectly fresh. It is true that eggs will be affected by certain foods, such as garlic, onions, slaughter-house refuse that hens may have access to, but barring the flavor, there is no other objectionable or dangerous matter connected with the hen fruit.

The Scranton Poultry and Pet Stock Association is making big preparations for its second annual show, to be held at Scranton, Pa., the third week in January. This is strictly a quality show, splendidly managed and very successful in every way.

Harry M. Lamon will give up his position as poultry manager of Willow Brook Farm, Berlin, Conn., December 1. He is looking for an opening where he can handle his old favorites, Buff Leghorns and Buff Plymouth Rocks. Harry is a star when it comes to breeding the latter.

"Jack" Haynes, many years the right bower of Secretary Crawford in handling the exhibits on the floor at Madison Square Garden, New York, will not be on duty during the coming show, outside business engagements preventing appearance. "Barney" Mosher will take his place, and being an old and experienced superintendent of poultry who has helped Mr. Crawford before, exhibitors can rest assured that birds will be well taken care of.

The fanciers in and around Hornell, N. Y., have organized and will hold a show December 18 to 21. Mr. C. E. Willard is the secretary and the old veteran, A. S. Stillman, will act as superintendent.

The Springfield Fanciers' Club has been incorporated to hold a poultry show, and will give one at Springfield, Mass., Dec. 12-15, 1906. The judges that have been secured are D. J. Lambert, Lester Tompkins, A. F. Pierce and D. E. Tacker. Besides these we have a specialty pigeon judge, for we confidently expect a large entry of pigeons. The club has received very encouraging reports from intending exhibitors and many inquiries for prize lists, which will be mailed by the 15th by Secretary W. R. Graves. It will be a score card show with an entry fee of $1 for single birds. In addition to the regular prices of $2 for first and $1 for second, the club will offer specialty cash prizes of $5 for the best display of any stardard variety or breed and corresponding prizes for pigeons. Several members and fanciers who are not members have offered $5 cash prizes, besides silver cups and other valuable specials. In connection with the show there will be a series of poultry institutes. Three lecturers have been secured to give lectures three evenings of the show. We have a hall in the same building especially adapted to this purpose. The Massachusetts Board of Agriculture will co-operate with the Springfield Fanciers Club in holding these institutes. The speakers are D. J. Lambert, who will speak on the subject, "Possibilities With Fancy Poultry"; Prof. C. K. Graham, of the Connecticut Agricultural, "The Commercial Side of Poultry Keeping"; and Dr. J. B. Paige, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, "Maintaining Health in the Flock."

The list of Game and Game Bantam specials which appear in another column of this issue, that will be offered at Madison Square Garden, New York, by the American Exhibition Game and Game Bantam Club, is a very generous one and should draw out big entries. Secretary B. C. Fincke has done his work well in compiling such a fine list.

The fanciers of Philadelphia and vicinity will meet at the Bingham House, Eleventh and Market streets, Monday, November 19th, to perfect arrangements for holding a poultry, pigeon and pet stock show, the first week in February, 1907. Mr. Jesse G. Darlington, the secretary pro tem, writes: "We had quite a number of enthusiastic fanciers at our first meeting and some committees were appointed to get things in shape and report at the next meeting." We are glad the Quaker City boys are waking up and intend giving the fanciers of the United States one of the old time shows Philadelphia was famous for.

There will be one of the largest displays of Barred Rocks ever seen in the state of Connecticut at the coming Danbury Show, to judge by the great list of specials offered. Mr. C. H. Welles, the famous Barred Rock specialist, offers a $25 silver cup for best cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen. Local breeders offer $25 in gold for the best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet. The above are supplemented by numerous other specials on the same breed.

The premium list of the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association came to hand just as we are ready to close the forms for the coming issue, and detailed comment regarding same must be deferred another week. The poultry judges selected are: C. M. Griffing, Ira C. Keller, G. H. Burgott, Richard Oke, W. C. Denny, J. B. Thomas, W. R. Graves, H. J. Quilhot, W. W. Babcock, Dr. J. S. Wolfe, William Barber, Eugene Sites, C. Kirshler, George Purdue, J. H. Drevenstedt, A. F. Dikeman, Geo. N. Northup, C. M. Smith and H. P. Schwab.

The Cornish Indian Club of America, recently organized with Charles S. Brent of Oconomowoc, Wis., as president, and William Sawer, Jr., of Owasso, Mich., as secretary and treasurer offers four splendid silk ribbons, one each for best cock, cockerel, hen and pullet, to exhibitors at any show in the United States when three or more members are competing. We are glad there is something doing in the Cornish Indian line, but what has become of the old Indian Game Club? There are a few lovers of the Cornish Indian left in the East who are anxious to keep not only the breed alive but the club as well.

THE NEBRASKA STATE SHOW FOR 1907.

The Nebraska state show for 1907 will be held in the Lincoln, Neb., Auditorium, the largest and best show-room in the whole west, lighted by electricity and steam heated, in the day time having more than enough light from its numerous windows. Exhibitors will be pleased to show their birds under its roof. The judges are W. S. Russell, C. H. Rhodes and F. H. Shellabarger. The premium list is almost ready for delivery at this time. It will be found to contain a big list with liberal money prizes in every class. Exhibitors should remember that this is one of the best "selling" shows in the whole West and that our premiums are guaranteed by the state and paid in full on the Friday of show week to every exhibitor who asks for his prize money. A big silver lovin cup has been offered for the best display of fresh eggs to be shown under the score-card method. This score-card will be found in the premium list. E. E. Smith of Lincoln, Neb., is chairman of the entertainment committee for the 1907 show and has full charge of the arrangements for the annual banquet. L. P. Ludden, Lincoln, Neb., is secretary and any further information can be had from him.

ITEMS.

Never set a hen with scruffy legs. The chicks hatched under such a one are sure to have it.

If the flock cannot run at large, sow wheat or screenings among straw or leaves. Make the hens work; without exercise they do not thrive.

Parched grain is excellent food, better than medicine to correct disorders in poultry. J. A.

PHILADELPHIA FANCIERS MEET.

The fanciers of Philadelphia and vicinity will meet at the Bingham House, 11th and Market Sts., on Monday, November 19th, at 1:30 o'clock, to perfect arrangements for holding a Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Show, the first week in February, 1907. All are invited.

AUBURN'S GREAT SHOW.

To our Friends and the Poultry Fraternity:

It is with great pleasure that we present to you our 6th annuali announcement that January 7 to 12, 1907, the Auburn Fanciers' Association will hold its annual exhibition of Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock under the auspices of the Second Separate Company, N. G. S. N. Y., in the spacious drill room of the Armory, with splendid light and the best of ventilation, and was conceded by all the exhibitors and visitors to be one of the best halls in the state for stock and exhibit.

The Association having held five very successful exhibits, and the one held in 1906, being the largest in the State outside of New York City, has won for it a reputation equaled by few, so that Fanciers realize a prize won at Auburn is worth going after.

We also wish to announce that the annual meeting of the American Poultry Association will be held in Auburn during the exhibition and will be one of the most important meetings ever held by the Association.

Mr. F. E. Dawley, director of Farmers' Institutes, will hold a Poultry Institute in the city during the week, and those who attend will have an opportunity of hearing the best talent in the country on poultry topics. It is expected that the following well known gentlemen will be heard: Mr. Theo. Hewes of Indianapolis; Mr. F. L. Kimmey of Morgan Park, Ills.; Mr. C. R. Graham of Massachusetts; Prof. James E. Rice of Cornell University, and Mr. T. E. McGrew of Washington, D. C.

The following well known judges have been engaged to place the awards:—H. J. Quilhot, T. E. Orr, T. F. Rigg, Newton Cosh, Eugene Sites, W. C. Denney, M. Davenport, Andrew Riddell, John D. Jacquin, M. S. Gardener, Henry Trafford and Clarence W. King. To all exhibitors we can say that they can feel assured that their stock will receive the best of care under the efficient management of Wm. H. Gifford and his able assistants. The contract for cooping the exhibition has been awarded to the Empire Cooping Co.

We shall endeavor this year to make the exhibition excel that of any of our previous ones in many ways.

Very truly yours,
AUBURN FANCIERS' ASSOCIATION
J. H. Scott, Secretary.

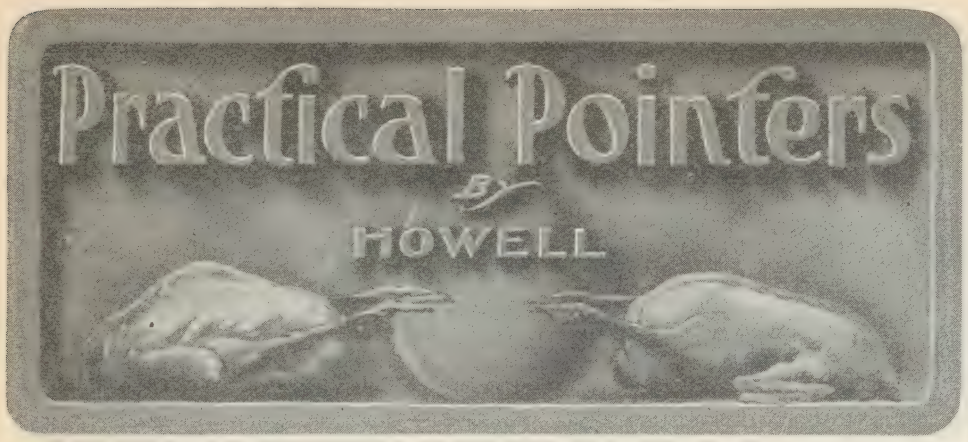
COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.



We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

The hen that lays is the hen that pays, is what the fellow said who has trap nests to sell.

The non-producing members of a flock are the non-payers, and the ones which reduce the profits.

The drones, the extra cockerels, should find a market before the snows come in earnest.

Up state poultrymen have had a taste of a young winter this early, which goes to show the thinning out process cannot be delayed long.

Employment should be provided for every moment in the day, especially on the stormy days when compelled to stay indoors.

Plenty of litter on the floor and some small grain thrown in it, is one of the most simple ways to provide exercise and activity.

When they get used to standing around on one leg, similar to the attitude assumed by the hired man when left to his own pleasure, their blood gets sluggish and the egg organs inactive, returning no profit to the owner.

The great national turkey day comes this month, and the whole nation will be making preparations to serve on that day, the original bird given up by the forests of America since the time the first white man tread upon American soil.

Much romance and not a little that is pitiful is attached to the history of the American turkey and the Indian.

From the moment the white race appeared, decay became apparent among the Indians, and they disappeared before the march of civilization.

The wild turkey was similarly affected, the shot gun of the settler, and later the same weapon of extermination in the hands of the pot hunter, coupled with the ax of the lumberman, made a resistless warfare upon them.

Domestication has increased the size and given us the Bronze, but debilitation still goes on.

A new disease, called the Blackhead, is killing the young turkeys each year, by the tens of thousands. This disease, similar to a scourge of yellow fever or cholera, has not been successfully combated as yet.

Rhode Island, made famous in turkey lore through the annual present to the head of the nation of a choice specimen, is the turkey center of the east; special attention having been paid to the industry and many thousands of birds sold annually. With the wiping out of the Narragansett, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Missouri and the great Southwest will monopolize the business.

A correspondent in the American Poultry Journal has this to say about buildings:

"There are a great many diseases to which fowls are subject that, if taken in time and the proper precautions taken, might be avoided, thus saving an immense amount of worry and labor, as well as adding very materially to the profits of the poultry business.

"It is very discouraging indeed when the young chicks are attacked with gapes, lice, bowel trouble, etc., any of which will cause great mortality among the young stock. But worse than all these is that dreaded disease —roup.

"This disease usually shows itself in the fall or early winter, and when once established in the flock is very hard to eradicate, and is liable to continue during the greater part of the winter. It is this disease to which I wish to draw special attention at this time, as the season will soon be here when it makes its appearance, and as it attacks the fowls after they have practically reached maturity, the loss of one may be equal to that of a dozen lost in infancy.

To avoid this trouble a great many poultrymen build expensive buildings, making them almost air-tight,and keep their poultry confined in these buildings the greater part of the winter, thinking their troubles with roup are ended.

This was brought very forcibly to my mind a few days since, when calling upon a friend who has been in the poultry business quite extensively for several years and who had built a very nice poultry house a few years ago.

This building was built similar to a dwelling house, sided with good lap-siding, with several windows, and lathed and plastered on side walls and veiling. Upon entering I noticed that the plastering had all been taken off, and when asked why this was done I was told that there had never been a case of roup on the premises until the poultry was placed in this building,and since that time they had not escaped a severe attack of roup every year until last fall, when the plastering was all taken off and the windows taken out and replaced with muslin. The result was not a single case of roup appeared in the flock.

This is very convincing evidence that damp, frosty walls and foul, impure air are the most prevalent causes of roup. And that sometimes, when we think we are putting in a little more money than we can well afford for the comfort of our fowls, we are not only throwing it away, but are also throwing it where it will cause also throwing it where it will cause great injury to our flocks.

"Remember the old adage, 'an ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure.' Fancy, high-priced buildings are not necessary."

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts last Saturday were 5,101 cases; for the week, 33,795; since March 1, 3,335,868. It begins to look as if there is no top to the market. Sellers by reason of scarcity are in position to name their own prices on strictly fresh eggs. The opening was characterized by a strong tone, which became more intense at the close. The supply of fine eggs of new laid quality this week has been totally inadequate to meet the requirements of the trade, and prices have naturally advanced from day to day. The receipts for the week considering the season were smaller than have been recorded for several years. Under the call sales were 100 cases of western seconds, f. g. seller Monday at 29½c, and 100 cases western firsts, delivered, seller 10 days at 33c. The last sale was subsequently made a spot transaction. Holdings of storage eggs have been materially reduced owing to the scarcity of fresh eggs, but while the tone is firmer than it has been for several weeks, liberal offerings have tended to check high prices.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts last Saturday were 1,218 packages; for the week, 11,268. The market is once more in its normal state, and, with old accumulations reduced to minimum quantities, dealers are in excellent shape to handle fresh receipts. The weather has been cool enough to permit the shipping of poultry dry-packed,and considerable stock has arrived from nearby sections. It is doubtful if it would be safe to ship stock from distant points without ice. There has been actual scarcity of large sizes of chickens, and small broilers. Dry-picked fowls have also been lightly offered. Spring turkeys ruled steady when of choice quality, but recent arrivals have been too large to broil and too small to roast. Prices have been in a wide range. Old turkeys are very scarce and firm. There has been fair demand for western ducks. Squabs are firm.

10,000 CHICKENS Raised With 36 Universal Hovers

Here is some more evidence of the wonderful adaptability of Prairie State Universal Hovers. During the past season W. R. Curtis & Co., on their famous Niagara Farm, at Ransomville, N. Y. successfully raised Ten Thousand Chicks with thirty-six Prairie State Universal Hovers. They have used as many as four hovers in one house, transferring them to other houses after the chicks no longer require them. Messrs. Curtis further state that during the rush season it was necessary to place in some houses as many as three hundred chicks, and the greatest loss in any of these instances did not exceed ten chicks. Can you conceive of a more economical and successful manner of rearing chicks?

Poultry-raisers are taking their heating apparatus out of other makes of brooders and installing in their place Prairie State Universal Hovers. We are at present remodeling brooding houses on large poultry plants, taking out expensive pipe systems that have proven unsuccessful and installing our modern brooding devices.

One of 40 Colony Houses used on Niagara Farm —fitted with Prairie State Universal Hovers

Think of this if you want to raise more chicks next year. Let us plan your brooding system for you now. Do not hesitate because your wants are not great, our systems fit the greatest or smallest plants and are as profitable for the little fellow as for the big one. Remember we positively guarantee our Brooding Systems. Write for our catalog, it shows the way and the why.

THE JOHNSTOWN SHOW.

In behalf of the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock Club, I wish to thank all those who so generously contributed to the special funds offered in our premium list to be competed for at our eighth exhibition, to be held in Kennedy Hall, Johnstown, N. Y., Dec. 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th, 1906. The prospects are very bright for a banner show, second to none (outside of New York) in the Empire state. Fanciers are already signifying their intentions of sending their birds to Johnstown by applying for premium list, which will be ready Nov. 10th, 1906. The show will be cooped by the Empire Cooping Co. and fed by Ralston Purina Co., St. Louis, U. S. A. B. W. Mosher, Sec'y and Treas., Johnstown, N. Y.

LABOR SAVING DEVICE.

Editor American Fancier:

Just as I sat down to write this your paper came in its new dress. It is very fine; the supplement is grand and is appreciated more because I breed Buff Rocks only.

I have a half acre in the city, and have been raising chickens for "business," and this great Pittsburg market is clamoring for more, more, all the time, but unless I go farther out and devote all my time to the business, I can do no more.

During the years I have been handling chickens I have gotten on to many little "kinks" that are helpful to those who raise poultry in the city or suburbs and work during the day, giving only their spare time to their birds. Did I say spare time? If all are like me they will find all their time employed with them, for while I am at work, being a stationary engineer for the "B. & O.", I am continually thinking of something to do or make for my yards and coops, and the drawing is one of the several labor-saving devices that may interest your readers.

I took a common wash boiler and arranged the pipes, etc., as shown, just like an ordinary toilet bowl tank. I placed this boiler in the wash house and connected from the city supply, and the overflow was run to the sewer or waste pipe. The feed pipe is ⅜ inch, with a tee for each cup, and as many as necessary can be used. I have one in each of my yards, five in all. These cups are common 3-pint flat tin buckets, painted on the outside to keep them from rusting, and are connected with the nipple which is screwed into the tee by two nuts, one under, the other inside the bucket.

The hole in the cup is just made large enough to slip over the nipple, on which one of the nuts has been screwed. A washer of gum placed on top of this nut before putting on cup and screwing up other nut keeps it from leaking. As will be seen, this device works by gravity, therefore boiler must be placed in such a position that the water level will be right in the cups.

The overflow pipe, shown as a straight pipe, I made to come out at one side near the bottom, and by using a couple of "unions" and some extra pipe, one on the supply and one on the feed pipe, enables me to place my boiler on the laundry stove in the cold weather, which with the overflow pipes at the water line between the cups, gives me a continual supply of warm water in winter. The valve on this latter overflow I keep closed in summer. This arrangement is very easily made; the float valve can be secured from any plumber, and in the hot days of summer the birds will greatly appreciate the fresh, cool water which is always at hand.

A more simple and easier way to arrange this would be to do away with the float and valve, and allow the water to run in slowly through the supply pipe; and with the overflow on a level with the water line in the cups, to run out, thus running continually. We, however, use our water by meter and in the city water bills are one of the things to be watched. Either way it saves labor and is a source of benefit.

We publish in this issue a most excellent letter on the Jacobin Standard by John Waters, Esq., of Belfast, Ireland.

Mr. Waters needs no introduction to American Jacobin fanciers, as he is and has been an authority on the Jacobin for the past quarter of a century, and his ideas will certainly be appreciated by all Jacobin Fanciers at this, a most critical time.

There seems to be quite a diversity of opinion among the foremost breeders at the present time, regarding the relative points of this popular variety. In fact, a committee has been formed to revise the present standard. Mr. Andrew W. Hall, one of the committee, requested Mr. John Water's opinion on this subject, hence the article published in this issue.

As the different varieties approach perfection, a change in the standard is always acceptable, providing that change is in the right direction and after a most careful study by the leading exhibitors and breeders.

Every clause should be carefully gone over and interpreted, so as to cause no confusion among the lesser lights.

The Jacobin is fortunate, being in the hands of a most intelligent set of Fanciers, men who are well versed on all points of their variety and well qualified to express their opinion intelligently.

* * * * *

The American Fancier's columns are always at your disposal for articles, notes, etc., which may be interesting and beneficial to the Pigeon Fancy in general.

Personal remarks are neither instructive nor desirable, but differences of opinion regarding the varieties themselves are both instructive and beneficial to all interested in the greatest of hobbies—Pigeons.

* * * * *

Mr. T. J. Nurse handled the stick in Jacobin alley at the recent Dairy show, and although he had quite a little trouble with the old birds, owing to the lateness of the moult, got through his task in a most creditable manner.

Mr. Grundy had the honor of owning The Jacobin of the exhibition, a great yellow.

The Eastern Fantail Club of America will offer four solid silver medals at the coming Boston Show January 15 to 19, 1907, for competition among the Club members only. For the best white, best black, best saddle, best blue, A. O. C. red or yellow in the show.

Voting slips for election of officers of the American Pigeon Club have been mailed to all members of the Club by Secretary E. C. Duffy and should be returned with your choice before November 30th.

A combination appears to have been selected to manage the affairs of the Club for the coming year, and you are requested to cast your ballot in their favor. These gentlemen are candidates for the respective offices: President, Dr. W. A. Gibson; 1st vice president, K. T. Muir; 2nd vice president, Atwood B. Hoskins; secretary and treasurer, Richard Whitney, and chairman of protest committee, A. D. Robinson. All are well known fanciers and should make most excellent officers. The office of secretary and treasurer appears to us the most important, as the life or death of a specialty club or association generally rests on his shoulders.

Mr. E. C. Duffy, the present secretary, has indeed always been alert and active and much of the success of the American Pigeon Club has been owing to his untiring efforts, mostly as with all secretaries thankless, to say the least.

Mr. Richard Whitney seems to be a worthy candidate to succeed him.

* * * * *

Come, breeders, step to the front. Join your specialty clubs, support them morally and financially. In fighting for for the position to which you believe your choice variety is entitled, don't forget the important fact that liberal advertising is one of your most powerful weapons.

The press is your natural ally and is ever ready to defend your cause and assist you.

The show season is here and it is, therefore, high time that you should set to work and forge rapidly ahead. Without specialty clubs many breeds which now hold prominent positions in the pigeon Fancy, would be relegated far below the present high station and others if properly supported, would mount to the places thus made vacant. Isn't a word to the wise sufficient?

The Rutherford, N. Y., annual exhibition, Dec. 19 to 21, has among a large list of specials, cups, etc., a silver medal for the best fantail in the show presented to the Association by the Fantail Club.

The classification is very liberal and with their special premiums should hold a great show. For premium list, address E. Y. Irwin, Rutherford, N. Y., secy.

Ashlev, secretary; Pigmy Pouter Club, E. C. Duffy, secretary; American Magpie Club, Dr. W. A. Gibson, secretary; Eastern Fantail Club, H. M. Pockman, secretary.

List of Pigeon judges are Ed. Page, Boston, Mass.; C. A. Koehler, Richmond Hill, N. Y.; W. J. Stanton, New York City; H. M. Pockman, Jersey City, N. J.; R. N. Oliphant, Trenton, N. J.; A. M. Ingram, Laurel, N. H.; F. W. Gorse, Highlandville, Mass.; H. D. Brown, Washington, D. C.; E. B. Ulrich, Reading, Pa.

Every pigeon fancier should join the Specialty Clubs of their variety and compete for the grand list of specials offered at the coming New York show. The eighteenth annual exhibition at the Garden will far surpass anything yet seen in this country. We have seen many premium lists and lists of specials, but the one before the fanciers to day is certainly a winner. Mr. H. V. Crawford is to be congratulated as secretary, to whom all should send for list. Montclair, N. J.

MR. FRED MAY'S HOMERS.

Editor American Fancier:

A statement was made some time ago through the columns of your journal that Mr. Fred May, a ancier of the Minneapolis district, N. F., had made a speed of 1399.48, while we now have to report a speed of 1296.48 for this race. The mistake was due to the agent wiring one time and filling out liberating sheet another and then scratching the time, for which he gives no excuse. Mr. Fisher at once called our attention to it and agent filled out a new liberating report, giving this speed. We do not offer this as an excuse, but feel that Mr. May's birds did make a speed of 1399.48 and can do it again.

TURBITS AT THE DAIRY.

Report from P. & P.

TURBITS (Judge, Mr. R. A. Parkin).

TURBITS made a good show, and were a credit to Mr. Parkin, the judge, who judged them in a very careful and painstaking manner. In the adults, undoubtedly the two best classes were the any other color classes, and the same in young birds.

BLUE OR SILVER COCK, 8: 1 Kell, massive head, good front, short, stout well set beak, sound color; 2 Scatliff, beaten in substance and color, otherwise very close up; 3 Scatliff, beautiful condition, not quite so full in nose; r Scatliff, small, well set beak; all blues; vhc Widger (2), good ones.

SILVER HEN, 9: 1 Scatliff, very taking silver, good head, frill, peak, and gullet, not the substance of beak; 2 Widger, a splendid headed blue, good eye and beak, frill and gullet; 3 Lobb, a good fronted silver, good head, stout beak, nice frill and peak; r Scatliff, gem of a blue, we liked as well as any, except markings and cold in eyes; vhc Santall, very sweet blue; hc Sutcliffe. RED OR YELLOW COCK, 11: 1 Stent, nice colored red, good head and front, short, stout beak, well set, good frill and peak; 2 Scatliff, red chequer, good head, stout beak, neat frill; 3 Leech, massive headed yellow, fails in wattle and size; r Fielding, splendid skulled yellow; vhc Leech, Stretch, Wright; empty Stephenson. RED OR YELLOW HEN, 8: 1 Stent, rich red, splendid head, beak and frill, wins; 2 Scatliff, good headed red, stout beak; 3 Duff, nice head, beak, eye and color; r Scatliff, good headed mis-marked red; vhc Scatliff; hc Duff. A. O. C. COCK, 17: 1 Dean, Champion Punch, beautiful head, beak, peak, frill and gullet, a grand finished Turbit; 2 Kell, grand head, stout beak, good frill and peak; 3 Morgan, massive head, good beak, nice frill and gullet; r Widger, a wonderful stout beaked, rich colored black, four splendid Turbits; vhc Lobb, Scatliff; hc Scatliff and Leech, Lewis; a grand class. A. O. C. HEN, 12: 1 Stephenson, a perfect gem of a black, hard to find fault with; 2 Collingbourne red cere about her only fault; 3 Dean very engaging black, beaten in substance of beak, three grand nens; r Widger, stout, well set beak, full front, good eye, peak and frill, rich color; vhc Leech, Scatliff, Staples, Widger (2); hc Horsfall. BLUE OR SILVER COCK, bred 1906, 9: 1 Brownbill, grand head, short, stout, well set beak, good frill and peak; 2 Scatliff, very cobby, good skull, beaten in substance of beak; 3 Brownbill, stout beak, good head, longer in face; r Jones, a splendid head and profile; all blues; vhc Leech, Kell, Widger; hc Stretch. BLUE OR SILVER HEN, 13: 1 Scatliff, full headed and fronted blue, small, good peak and brill; 2 Widger, beaten in front, well set beak, good peak, sound color; 3 Husband, good head and beak, fails condition; r Brownbill, good skull, beak and profile; vhc Santall, Widger, Leach; hc Stretch, Scatliff; unnoticed Jones, sweet, hen; all blues. RED OR YELLOW COCK, 11: 1 Tolman, good head, well set beak, full front, bold eye, nice color; 2 Stent, fails in condition, must have pressed hard; 3 Stretch, good headed bird, beaten in beak; res. Wright, stylish yellow; vhc Duff; hc Stanford, Duff, Leech. RED OR YELLOW HEN, 9: 1 sp Stephenson, by far the best red hen we have ever seen, a living picture; 2 Stent, good head nice short beak, rich red; 3 Tolman, nic headed yellow, stout beak; r Stretch, good head and style; vhc Wright, Duff. A. O. C. COCK, 16: 1 Widger, a clinking black, grand head, stout beak, good frill and gullet; 2 Leech, another grand headed black, stout beak, good peak, nice frill, rich color, biggest fault too large; 3 Scatliff, splendid head points, except cere, rich color, cobby; r Widger, shelly peak spoils him; vhc Widger, Staples, Dean, Scatliff; hc Collingsbourne, Dean; grand class. A. O. C. HEN, 15: 1, sp Lobb, grand head, short, stout beak, good eye, frill and gullet, rich colored black; 2 Scatliff, a massive dun cheq., stout beak, good eye, frill and peak; 3 Lewis, smart black; r Widger, good dun chequer; vhc Santall, a good one; Scatliff, Lobb, Dean; hc Leech; a hot class.

JACOBINS AT THE DAIRY.

Report from P. & P.

As usual for the past few years Jacobins again mustered strongly; indeed, considering the time of year, when very few adults are through moult, and the bulk of youngsters not ready, the entry must be considered satisfactory, the young birds numbering 49 in three classes, which we think is a record. In addition, three of Frost's were erroneously entered in the Turbit classes.

RED OR YELLOW, 11: 1 Webster, smothered in feather; 2 Reid, one of the best, not much to choose between these two reds; 3 Dr. Elliott, brighter in color, good Jack, but not quite ready; r Grundy, yellow, great wealth of feather, but lacks finish of hood; vhc Allen, Smith & Son; hc Reid, Wood; all really good birds. BLACKS, 14: 1 Grundy, lovely color, style and hood, wins; 2 W. Potts, not quite so long in feather, beautiful metallic color all through, finish of chain and hood perfection; 3 Webster, perhaps the longest feathered bird in the class, not so well shown, and has not the finish of the winners; r Smith, fair, good all round specimen; vhc Pillans, Wood, the latter good, but mane twisted; hc Smith & Son. A. O. C., 7: 1 Webster, heavily feathered kite; 2, 3 Pillans, white and splash, both grand in length and play of feather; r Darch, white; vhc Dr. Elliott, Wood; hc Cooper. RED OR YELLOW, 1906, 17: This was one of the best classes ever seen at the Dairy; we think the Council would be well advised in adding a young class, for this color grows in popularity every year; 1, medal Grundy, rich colored yellow, marvelous length of feather, with good formation; 2 Wood, red, smothered in feather, little deficient in carriage; 3 Pillans, lovely yellow, but not the length of color of the winner; r Allen, heavily feathered red, well colored through vent; vhc Reid, great wealth of feather, open hood, marked on face; Pillans, Grundy, Wood, Blakeley; hc Reid Allen. BLACK, 1906, 20: 1 Webster; 2 Birch; 3 Smith & Son, all tip-top specimens, not much to choose between them, the winner had perhaps a little advantage in color, and just a wee bit deeper in chains, but each had lovely hoods, and were as near perfection as possible; r Sawley, close up, slightly marked on face; vhc Singleton, Elliott, Blakeley, Page, Sawley; hc, Reid, Smith, Messent; a good class throughout. A. O. C., 1906: 1 Webster, lovely white, will still further improve; 2 Allen, also white, not far behind; 3 Reid, long feathered kite; r Singleton, splash; vhc Pillans, Fox; hc Singleton, Fox, Greenway.

Report from P. & P.

ARCHANGELS (Judge, Mr. H. W. Webb) COCK, 10: 1, sp Bryan, grand rich neck, beautiful shoulders, good head and peak, very pale in cere; 2 Berry, good head, eye, and peak, nice color, bit pinky on shoulders, and fails in tail; 3, r Leigh-Lye, capital color and shape, good shoulders, not quite fit; absent 4732, 4734 Brown, 4735 Mrs. Nicholson. HEN, 8: 1 Leigh-Lye, capital color, beautiful sheen, nice head, grand eye, not fit; 2 Newman, nice color and shape, not so much sheen, very rich eye; 3 Allen, capital shape and color, grandly bronzed, and plenty of sheen, pale in cere; r Maurice; absent Brown and Nicholson. BRED 1906, COCK, 13: 1, 3 sp Berry, beautifully sound in color, good neck, nice shape; 3d not so rich in color, and like the winner a bit pinky on shoulders, both good in eye and cere, and in rare fettle; 2 Allen, sounder in tail, nice eye, pale in cere, good back and shoulders; r, vhc Dell, capital shape and feather, bit pale in cere, not quite so rich in bronzing; hc Mrs. Booker, Leigh-Lye. HEN, 15: 1 Leigh-Lye, very lustrous and sound in color, good back and shoulders, fails in tail; 2 Berry, beautiful lustre and color, just a trifle dark on thighs, and fails a bit in tail, grand feather and good eye; 3 r Allen, both much sounder in tail, grand color, and rare condition, but not quite so rich in sheen on back and shoulders.

ORIENTALS AT THE DAIRY.

Report from P. & P.

ORIENTAL FRILLS (Judge, Mr. H. Allsop).

ORIENTAL FRILLS numbered 164 in 15 classes, averaging 11 per class, and made a very fine show. All the leading lofts were represented. and the competition in most of the classes was exceptionally keen. For the first time for some years the adult Oriental Turbit classes were allowed to stand. the entries numbering six and 9 respectively. We notice eight out of the nine leading awards went to one loft, and we cannot help regretting that the best birds are not widely distributed amongst a number of fanciers. So long as this state of things continues, we very much fear the variety will not flourish. The adult black or dun Blondinettes only numbered six and eight entries respectively, although the quality was excellent. It is surprising that these classes should not be better filled, more especially as there were 16 young birds. There was good support for the remaining classes, of which the A. O. C. Blondinetts had no less than 46 entries in three classes.

ORIENTAL TURBIT. COCK, 6: 1, 2, 3, r Leech, all blacks, good typical heads and beaks, 1st best profile, 3d shows signs of age; hc Kitchen. HEN, 9: 1, 2, 3, r Leech, 1st black, grand head, good color; 2d dun, not so stout; 3d black, excellent frontal, slightly flat on top; vhc Kitchen; hc Miss Gibson; c Brannam. BRED 1906, 8: 1, challenge trophy, 2, vhc, hc Leech, both blacks, grand heads and color, either might have won, 1st slightly shorter in face; 3 Roberts, black, rounder skull, not so massive, looks like a hen; r Roberts, black, fails color; c Hall. TURBITEEN COCK, 11: 1 Mercer, black, grand color, fair in marking, good head, fails slightly on top; 2 Sparkes, blue barred, grand skull, color and markings, poor beak; 3 Riddell, yellow, nice color, good stout beak, poor skull and long in face; r Machin, best head in class, a little short of marking, fails in color, the Altrincham winner; vhc, hc L. C. Sharp; hc C. F. Sharp. TURBITEEN HEN, 9: 1, 3 Machin, 1st black, well-known hen, only fault slightly flat on top; 3d not so good in color, poor beak; 2, r Riddell, red, splendid color, short of cheek markings, nice head; hc Sparkes, Mercer; c Seaton. BRED 1906, 7: 1, and challenge trophy, hc Mercer, black, grand head and color, bare toes, wins well; 2 Riddell, yellow, nice color and head, short of markings; 3 Machin, a black, badly set beak; r Lever, fails head. BLONDINETTES, BLACK OR DUN COCK, 6: 1 Kitchen, black, good lacing, magnificent skull and beak; 2 Leech, black, beautiful light lacing, good skull, poor beak; 3, r, hc J. F. King, black, nice heavy lacing, good head, rather cery. HEN, 8: 1 Kitchen, dun, nice lacing, bit heavy on butts, good head; 2 Leech, dun, better lacing, beaten in beak setting; 3 Turton, another dun, grand head, rather blotchy in lacing; r, vhc, hc J. F. King, black, good head and lacing, might have been higher. BRED 1906, 16: 1 Turton, dun, perfect lacing, grand head, splendid condition, one of the best Orientals ever bred, looks like the Altrincham winner; 2 challenge trophy Lee, black, very good heavy lacing, splendid skull and beak; 3, hc (2) J. F. King, dun, not so clear in ground color, very good head and beak; r Roberts, dun, light lacing, rather fine in head; vhc Kitchen; hc Machin; empty Phillips and Dawson. BLONDINETTE, A. O. C., 18: 1 Moss, sulphur, beautiful lacing, grand frontal, good tail; 2 H. E. King, sulphur, splendid lacing, very good head, gay tail; 3 J. F. King, blue barred, perfect color, nice skull, very thick beak; r Turton, blue laced, nice lacing, good head, fails beak; vhc Roberts; hc Bastard, Leech, Kitchen, Derrick. HEN, 11: 1 H. E. King, lavender, the Altrincham winner, nice lacing, grand head and beak; 2, hc Turton.

NUNS AT THE DAIRY.

Report from P. & P.

NUNS (Judge, Mr. H. Allsop).

A couple of very strongly contested classes were those for Nuns, although the competitors were but few. The many birds were certainly very close together, and the youngsters give one the impression that the competition is going to be keen.

A. C., 9: 1, 2, hc Roberts, couple of lovely blacks, grand skulls and shells, not the clearest of eyes, rare form; 3 Hallet, black, full shell, good head and face, nice bib, clear eye; r Dosser; vhc Reynolds Bros. BRED 1906, 11: 1 Dosser, good skulled black, neat full shell, good bib; 2 r vhc Roberts, blacks, shapely skull, good face and beak, rare shell and bib, close up; 3 Cruickshank, promising young black, good shell and head, not clear in eye, and soiled; hc Reynolds Bros.

AMERICAN TUMBLER CLUB.

The club election closed with the following results: B. T. Lyman, president; Cyrus O'Loughlin, first vice-president; E. J. Young, second vice-president; Isaac Sprague, auditor; and Richard Whitney, secretary-treasurer. The club will meet with the Boston Show, and Messrs. Gorse and Eustis will judge.

The next point of interest in our program is the club show. We have now a chance to make a record by filling all our coops with the best of stuff. Each of you should dig through your stuff and see if you can't find a few more good ones to help fill up the holes, and at the same time make the judge go it to find the winners. Begin now to condition your stock, for the big shows are coming and you want to be represented at all of them. Tumblers have not been out in large numbers at the fall shows, making poor showing where they should have led. Let us see if we can't make a record at the remaining shows by turning out big and strong. We have the quality of stuff as well as the quantity, and it therefore only requires the work of getting them ready to make that showing that we all like to see; good birds, plenty of them, well shown and well judged. The well shown part of this is the one that does not receive enough attention from most of us. Birds appear in the pens not only with dirty feet and legs,but with soiled and rumbled feathers all over them. Now let us make a special effort to put our birds down in the best of shape. We can do it if we try.

Don't forget to give the circular I sent you your earnest attention, for it is by such means that showing is encouraged. Write us now.

Here I want to suggest a change in our by-laws by adding an Executive Committee to our list as a body to run the club. The committee to be composed of all the officers and four other members elected by the club. This committee to take over the work of the present membership and prize committees and also to have the direction and control of all the club business; to run our exclusive, collect specials, determine classifications, settle disputes, etc.

Another thing that I think is imperative is to have a list of men that the club will endorse as judges for any and all shows, men that we are prepared to show under wherever they judge. Such a list should cover the country and give show associations a line on the men that we consider desirable for judges at their shows. A list of this sort would be of great assistance to them, as of course they want the men that will draw out the entries. I should like to have your opinion of these two ideas.

RICHARD WHITNEY, Sec'y.

DATES CLAIMED.

Under this heading there will appear each week a list of all the shows claiming dates for the coming season. Secretaries of poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in the dates selected as promptly as possible. It is not only a convenience and guide to secretaries of shows that have not selected their dates, but of great interest to readers of The American Fancier, a majority of whom are exhibitors.

WE WANT NAMES

We want YOU to send us the names and addresses of from ten to twenty-five persons living in the United States, each one having twenty-five hens or more. You can send us the names from any number of different postoffices. If you will send us these names we will send you TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES FREE. These pictures are reproductions of the most celebrated paintings in the world, and they are of high quality, and we know that you will be pleased and delighted with them; no pictures will be given for a list of less than ten names.

We want to send a free sample copy of a special issue of the HOME MONTHLY (The National Poultry Journal), to a lot of poultry raisers who are not now taking our paper and for that reason we want these names.

Send us immediately a list of at least ten poultry raisers and we will mail, postpaid, ABSOLUTELY FREE, TWO REPRODUCTIONS OF THE WORLD'S FAMOUS PICTURES, beautiful colors, size 15x20 inches. Address: THE HOME MONTHLY, 20 North William St., New York.

Let Me Hand You My Latest Book on Poultry Culture

ABSOLUTELY FREE

I want to send you a copy of this book free. It is a gold mine of practical information for the poultry-raiser. I call it "An Easy Lesson in Poultry Culture," because the lessons it teaches are easy to learn and easy to apply. My object in publishing this book is to point out how dollars in place of cents can be made in producing poultry and eggs for market purposes. It is stated so plainly that the novice can follow the directions and make a success of the poultry business. I especially commend the chapter, "The Back-Lotter" to the city dweller who wants to "try-out" this business before going into it on a large scale. And then I have another book—a good companion for this one—"Poultry Feeding for Profit" that you should have also. It is full of feeding facts that I know, from actual experience, will be valuable to every chicken raiser. It gives feeding methods and information that will be helpful every day, for every fowl on your place—from the little chick "just out" to the old hen you are fattening for market. There is lots of money in the poultry business if you know how to handle chickens right. These two books will give you all the information you'll need—information you can put into practice. You cannot get this information anywhere else. Write today, I will send both books free, and also send my catalog on Model Incubators and Brooders the latest and most successful hatching and rearing machines on the market.

REMINISCENCES re THE BELGIAN HARE

By W. F. Roth, M. D.

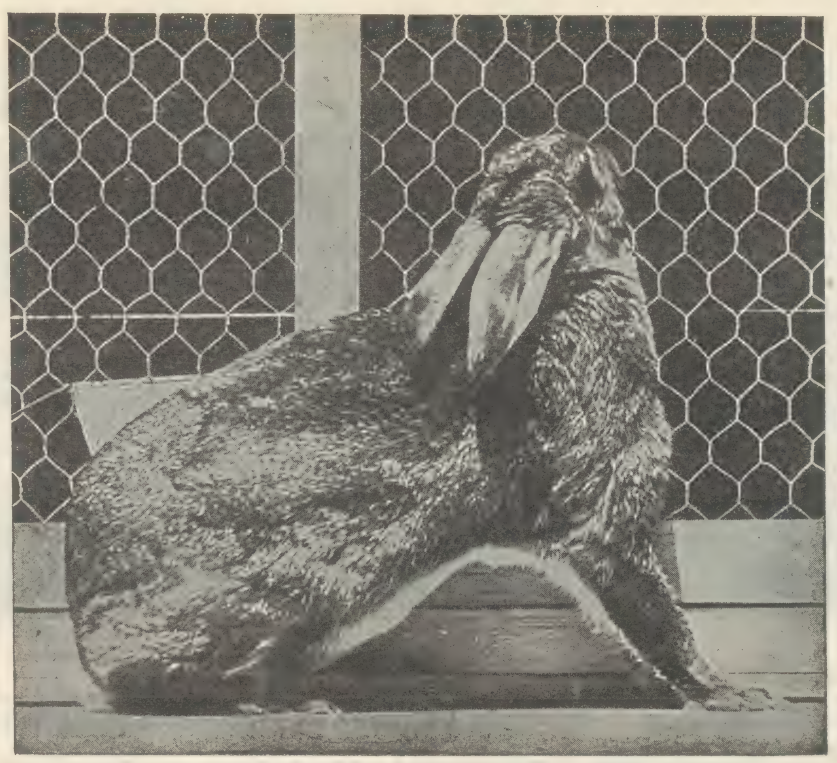
I recall now with regretted interest the great agitation in behalf of the Belgian Hare in the late nineties, when strenuous effort was put forth to establish the breeding of hares as an industry of national import.

At that time I was not sufficiently interested to give more than passing notice, and would perhaps then paid no attention but for the fact that the local daily papers (I then resided in Philadelphia) devoted large space to an exhibition of thoroughbred stock close by my home. The parties having the hares in charge, and the exhibition, I think, were under the auspices of a California company of importers, and such exalted remarks concerning the quality of the animals to be seen, and the fact that for many years as a young man on the farm I had "raised rabbits," aroused a latent interest to see these hares. In fact, I had never knowingly seen Belgians before; and to look at a "rabbit" priced at $100.00 I fancied worth while going around the corner to see.

If I recall partially correct, I remarked to the superintendent in charge, "Is it true that you have a 'rabbit' here rated at one hundred dollars?"

"It is, and I shall take pleasure in showing you our stock." They had rented a large store-room of an imposing building on the corner of Broad and Somerset streets, for which I am sure the rent could not have been much less than twenty-five dollars a week; and this fact, with the fixtures, window display, and other et cetera, impressed me that the "rabbit" industry must be something worth recognizing if such an outlay were justified for exhibition purposes. The room was really attractive in every way aside from its aristocratic inmates, and the finest turnouts in the city were daily seen lined along the curb, which gave the impression of uncommon prestige.

I was more than delighted with the attendant's attention to me as he passed from coop to coop speaking with enthusiasm of Fashoda, Lord this and Lord that; Lady so and Lady so; King, Queen, Duke, Duchess of this, that, and the other, until I was fairly bewildered; and I determined that the first opportunity which offered would put me in possession of hares worthy of creditable admiration. The animals here shown were remarkable for beauty, grace, and symmetry, which indicated breeding of the highest order, and I am astonished now by these reflections why the industry of rearing Belgians has not materialized with more universal recognition. Any of the above graces would warrant the hare as a worthy candidate for every farm in the land; but when its value from a culinary point is considered, the small cost of rearing it; the rapid maturity to edible size, and the insignificant space it requires for a home, I am surprised that farmers and others who cater to city markets and hotel trade are so blind to the usefulness of a table article that stands first as a thing good to eat.



Part of my home is used as a private hospital, and I assure every reader that my patients look forward to no menu with more pleasure than the one containing hare as the principal dish. No class of patients are perhaps more whimsical in their appetites than people who suffer with cancer, and I often have serious trouble in maintaining strength while they undergo treatment; but in no instance, no matter how often, was the meat, broth, or any dish made from the hare refused —a fact that should carry weight in favor of the Belgian beyond controversy.

I would like to see the Belgian made a typical department in every farm and poultry journal in the United States; for the hare should certainly become a universal farm product with the sheep and the chickens. Its meat is far superior to that of poultry, and in nourishing elements stands at the head of all meats—no doubt due to the extraordinary cleanliness and delicacy with which it feeds, and the good and select food it will only eat.

I am aware, there are a few poultry journals that give the hare a department—so called; but with one exception, the department editor's self-advertisement is so apparent as to make the feature appear ridiculous, and the hare as an industry most mediocre.

I sincerely hope our intelligent breeders, of whom there are not a few, I am quite sure, will take an occasional moment each month to say several good things along the line of comparison between the hare and other farm-reared animals, to the end that conviction is sure to follow in favor of an industry both practical and very useful.

I think all publishers of both farm and poultry journals will be more than glad to accept and grant space to intelligent communications on this topic

IMPORTED BELGIAN HARE.

DOGS.

By Geo. W. Weed.

I will have to admit that the above is a new subject for me to write upon. My excuse must be that within the last six months it has been my good fortune to have been entertained by three different dog men, and all breeders of hounds, and yet while all hounds, would hardly be considered the same genus.

My first visit was to the Valley Farm kennels, without doubt the largest breeders and importers of Russian wolfhounds in America. Here we see dogs that have been raised in an aristocratic way by the best blue blood in Russia. To readers that have not seen or do not know what a Russian wolfhound is, let me say to you that Webster will not help you out, for there is no long pendulous ears in this case. A long haired greyhound is nearer the article with greater lung capacity and with a peculiar droop to their hind quarters that means speed and lots of it. Their use is said to be principally to hunt wolves, and the tales that are told of their running powers and fighting qualities are something wonderful. That they are wonderful flame fighters there is no question. They are also very affectionate and attached to their masters. A visit to Valley Farm Kennels will certainly repay any lover of a pure bred animal.

Our next dog visit was to the famous Imperial Bloodhound Kennels, Danbury, Conn.

Perhaps the bloodhound is the least understood of any pure bred dog in America. Slavery legends, and other tales of that ilk, along with their name "blood," led the most of people to suppose that they are of a natural blood-thirsty disposition, when they are really the reverse. It is certain, to have a good show bloodhound you must have a good head on the same, for head, including ears, eyes and lips, are 35 points of the possible 100 for the whole dog. A striking feature is the looseness of skin on the head. There is seemingly enough skin to cover a head twice the size and this lays in huge wrinkles, that gives the dog a very sedate and thoughtful look. I shall not attempt to describe these dogs, for by your simply writing Dr. Knox, Danbury Conn., he will send you a little booklet that will tell you in much better language than I can, of the dogs, but will not tell you of the Kennels. They have got to be seen to be appreciated. No dwelling house is kept cleaner or with more or an idea to the comfort of the occupant. That Dr. Knox has a treasure in the way of a caretaker is seen at a glance—and that Dr. Knox is what the old lady would call a "good provider," is also patent. Meat by the quarter, milk by the can, biscuit by the barrel, and eggs—well, a large flock of ducks are kept to lay eggs for dog food. The yards are all double fenced with fences some six feet apart, to keep stray distemper-carrying curs from infesting the flock. It certainly costs money to raise bloodhounds.

Our next and last visit is to the Debonair Beagle Kennels located at Gloversville, N. Y. Well, readers, you all know what a Beagle hound is—if you don't, why just visit the above Kennels and you will soon know—that is if seeing some 150 of the best in the country will help you in your knowledge. That the little beagle has been slowly but surely taking one of our shining lights from Poultrydom there is no denying, for "Zim's" name is heard no more in the land of Poultry judges.

"Zim" is his own caretaker; he knows the voice of every beagle that is old enough to have a voice, and I venture to say there are few men in the United States that receive more looks of affection than does this same little lover of beagles. By the way, how each of the three breeders of dogs I have just been writing about typifies his respective breeds:—Mr. Thomas, tall lean, muscular, agile, the same adjectives will apply to the wolfhound.

Dr. Knox, sedate, aristocratic, noble head, medium size, all attributes of the noble bloodhound. Short, good natured, hunting loving "Zim" and all can be applied to his little beagles.

POULTRY EXPERIMENTS.

Go-Well Farm.

Of the hundred acres of land comprising the farm, thirty acres immediately at, and overlooking the village of Orono, was fallowed and tilled for a year, then seeded to clover and grasses, in order to bring it into good condition for poultry farming.

The Barn and Incubator Room.

A barn of the Shrever plank frame pattern, 40 feet square, with 22 feet walls, was erected over a dry basement which has a heavy stone wall on three sides. The ground slopes away from the building on the east side sufficiently so that the large doors and windows in that side of the basement, open out on the receding ground, and renders the basement easy of access from a nearly level yard outside.

In addition to the two windows of 12 lights each, of 10 by 14 glass, in the east wall, the basement is lighted by 2 cellar windows in each of the 3 other sides. This gives a dry, well lighted room, 7 feet high and a little more than 36 feet square. It furnishes ample room for 24 of the largest Cyphers incubators, 5 or 6 barrels of oil, work tables and wide passages among the machines.

The windows on the exposed sides are shaded, when necessary, to protect from the warmth of the direct rays of the sun. During the spring months when the incubators are being used, the temperature of this room varies but little with changes in the weather outside. The first floor above the basement furnishes room for the storage of feed, machinery, appliances, and a general work room, while above it on the second floor, there was stored last season, 40 tons of hay.

Brooder Houses.

There are 40 brooder houses built on shoes, so that they can be easily drawn about the farm to clean land when necessary. In size and construction, they are like the houses described under the heading,—Brooder Houses.

In addition to the 80 Peep-O'Day brooders in these houses, there are 8 Cyphers out door brooders in use. Six thousand chickens are being raised this season (1906).

The Laying and Breeding House.

During the summer of 1905 a laying house was built to accommodate 2,000 hens. It is 20 feet wide and 400 feet long. It is on the same general plan as houses No. 2 and 3 at the Experiment Station. House No. 2 is 12 feet wide; house No. 3 is 16 feet wide, and this one is 20 feet wide. The widths have been increased in the last two houses, as experience has shown the advisability of it. At first it was thought the houses should be narrow so they might dry out readily, but the widest house dries out satisfactorily as the opening in the front is placed high up, so that in the shortest winter days the sun shines in on the floor to the back.

The economy in the cost of the wide house over the narrow ones, when space is considered, is evident. The front and back walls in the narrow house cost about as much per lineal foot as those in the wide house, and the greatly increased floor space is secured by building in a strip of floor and roof, running lengthwise of the building. The carrying capacity of a house 20 feet wide is 66 per cent. greater than that of a house 12 feet wide, and it is secured by building additional floor space only. The walls, doors and windows remain the same as in the narrow house, except that the front wall is made a little higher. Three sills which are 6 inches square run lengthwise of the house, the central one supporting the floor timbers in the middle. They rest on a rough stone, high enough from the ground so that dogs can go under the building to look after rats and skunks that might incline to make their homes there. The stone wall rests on the surface of the ground. The floor timbers are 2 by 8 inches in size and rest wholly on top of the sills. All wall studs rest on the sills; the front ones are 8 feet long and the back ones 6 feet 6 inches long. The roof is unequal in width, the ridge being in 8 feet from the front wall. The height of the ridge from the sill to the extreme top is 12 feet 6 inches. All studding is 2 by 4 in size and the rafters are 2 by 5. The building is boarded with inch boards and papered and shingled with good cedar shingles on walls and roof. The floor is of two thicknesses of hemlock boards, which break joints well in the laying.

The building is divided by tight board partitions into 20 sections, each section being 20 feet long. All of the sections are alike in construction and arrangement. The front side of each section has two windows of 12 lights by 10 by 12 glass, screwed on, upright, 2 feet 8 inches from each end of the room. They are 3 feet above the floor. The space between the windows is 8 feet 10 inches long, and the top part of it down from the plate, 3½ feet, is not boarded, but left open to be covered by the cloth curtain when necessary. This leaves a tight wall, 3 feet 10 inches high, extending from the bottom of the opening down to the floor, which prevents the wind from blowing directly on to the birds when they are on the floor. A door is made in this part of the front wall for the attendant to pass through when the curtain is open. A door 16 inches high and 18 inches wide is arranged under one of the windows for the birds to pass through to the yards in front. It is placed close down to the floor. A similar door is in the center of the back wall to admit them to the rear yard when that is used.

A light frame, made of 1 by 3 inch pine strips and 1 by 6 inch cross ties, is covered with 10 ounce white duck, and hinged at the top of the front opening, which it covers when closed down. This curtain is easily turned up into the room where it is caught and held by swinging hooks until it is released.

The roost platform is made tight and extends along the whole length of the room against the back wall. It is 4 feet 10 inches wide and 3 feet above the floor, high enough so that a person can get under it comfortably when necessary to catch or handle the birds. There are three roosts framed together in two 10 feet sections. They are one foot above the platform and hinged to the back wall so they may be turned up out of the way when the the platform is being cleaned. The back roost is 12 inches from the wall, and the spaces between the next two are 16 inches. They are made of 2 by 3 inch spruce stuff, placed on edge, with the corners rounded off. The roosting closet is shut off from the rest of the room by curtains, similar to the one described above. For convenience in handling, there are two of them, each 10 feet long. They are 3 feet wide and are hinged at the top so as to be turned out and hooked up. The space above this curtain is ceiled up and in it are two openings each 3 feet long, and 6 inches wide, with slides for ventilating the closet when necessary. There is a door in every partition, placed 5 inches out from the edge of the roost platform. They are 3 feet wide and 7 feet high; they are divided in the middle, lengthwise, and each half is hung with double acting spring hinges, allowing them to swing open both ways, and close.

LAYING COMPETITIONS.

By W. R. Gilbert.

What is the precise value of laying competitions? is a question which may be raised in some quarters, in spite of the increased interest taken generally by the poultry world, in this comparatively novel form of competition.

The poultry show is an institution of ne age, and its value is still debata- —more especially when placed in junction with agricultural shows. has elevated poultry keeping to a cult, and "improved" some breeds practically out of existence. The farmer will have none of it. But the laying competition comes under a different category. It demonstrates that the winter egg is procurable, given adequate food and treatment, in numbers which would be good even in summer. In one competition I noticed where a pen of four averaged 60 eggs each for the last 12 weeks of the year and first four of the next year, which is to my mind a pretty good record.

The object, then, of these competitions is to encourage poultry keepers to improve the laying powers of their fowls. Just as in cows there is a wide range in milk yields, so in fowls there is a wide range in egg returns, and poultrymen are too prone to be content with yields which, if analyzed, show but small profit to their owners. Far too many poultry keepers will not keep records, and are far too easily satisfied. They take a few weeks in spring when the hens are all laying, note a return of, say fifty eggs in the week from ten hens, and call it good. So it is for a few, but a few weeks of excellent laying returns will not compensate for weeks of idleness during other parts of the year. Any average hen in good health and in her laying prime will lay fairly well through spring and summer. What we want are hens that lay through autumn and winter, when in the ordinary course, but one egg is laid for every seven and a half in spring and summer. We do not produce enough winter eggs at present, and have to fall back upon the preserved article, but they, however well looked after, are not fresh eggs, and consumers know this, and are ready to pay accordingly for really fresh eggs, but, however ready they are to pay, there are not enough of the real article for them.

What we want are strains of birds that will lay through the autumn and winter, and at present these are hard to get. Even many of the hens competing at these laying competitions lay very badly, indeed in one instance they refrained from laying at all, a most disastrous affair, as it shook the belief of many in the efficiency of such competitions, more especially as in this one. Five pens laid under 100 eggs. The breeds were such useful egg laying fowls as White Leghorns, Faverolles, Silver Wyandottes, Partridge Wyandottes, and Black Minorcas. But these particular failures do not stigmatize the above breeds as bad layers, but merely the failure of particular strains. Some competitors will send birds too young to do their owner justice, others again are so upset by the change of locality and change of food to which they are not subject that they take half the time of the competition to recover from the effects, and are therefore left hopelessly in the rear when the race ends.

That there is room for vast improvement in our egg returns, considering the number of fowls kept, is a truism no one will contest. By help of these competitions we are gradually increasing laying strains, and these will more and more be distributed among the different poultry keepers. The farmer himself has no time to develop a laying strain out of ordinary material. It is done chiefly by the aid of trap nests. By this means every egg is credited to the hen that laid it. And the variations are surprising, even among the picked layers sent to compete for the laying competitions; in some cases half the eggs in a pen of four are laid by one pullet. By use of the trap nest the bad layer is detected, and finally eliminated, her eggs are not set for incubation, and the perpetuation of her bad points is checked. Hitherto we have gone on impartially, producing good layers and bad layers, and thus spoiling general averages.

The worst of the trap nest is that it is not automatic. The hen has to be released by human hands, and the egg noted and registered. In other words, through the greater part of the day somebody has to be constantly in and out of the laying houses, releasing the hens, recording the eggs, and resetting the nests. It is a serious and additional tax on the time of the poultry keeper, and not every one of them has the time to spare. But those who do, and make a business of weeding out the bad layers, and get layers with a character, reap their reward, for their strains become valuable, and birds from it are sold at remunerative prices. It is here the average poultry keeper benefits. He can buy pedigree layers, or eggs from pedigree layers, and if he has to pay more for them, they are cheaper in the long run. For it cannot be too often pointed out that only good layers should be kept; they eat no more, and take up no more room than the wasters we see flourish on many a farm. Let us hope for the time when the bad layer will become a negligable quantity, and exist only as a fancier's pet.

W. R. GILBERT.

ALASKA-YUKON PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

Seattle, 1909.

To the Poultrymen of America:

The Alaska-Yukon Pacific Exposition, which will be held at Seattle, U. S. A., during the fall and summer of 1909, will be a great international exposition, a world's fair in every sense.

The executive committee of the exposition has already appropriated $100,000 for the Live Stock show. A liberal amount of the sum will be allotted for the Poultry Exhibit, which it is the aim of the management to make the most successful from every standpoint ever held.

As poultrymen you are interested in seeing that we succeed in our purpose, and in order to do so the arrangements must be of the highest order and the prizes offered so large that they will induce every breeder of thoroughbred poultry in the United States and Canada to bring their birds here to compete. Such an event will be of incalculable benefit to every earnest poultryman, and will be another great stride forward by the poultry industry of the country.

Now, in order to successfully accomplish this great object, it is necessary for every poultryman to take an active interest in it and do all in his power to help make the exhibition a success. One of the first things to be done by everyone interested in poultry is to take this matter up with your senators and representatives and have them use their best efforts toward securing a large appropriation for this exposition, as the larger the appropriation each state gets for its exhibit the better will be the poultry exhibit.

Second, take this up in your local association, have your county authorities do something for you in the way of helping to bear the expense of a good exhibition from your county, and do such other things as you think will help your state to be fully represented at this great fair.

Now, brother poultrymen, here is your opportunity to help us make a success of this. If you show a proper interest I am sure you can get your state and county officers to work for appropriations which will assure your state of an exhibit of which you may be justly proud. Don't throw this away, but get to work at once. Make any suggestion or inquiry you like, but do something.

Fraternally yours,
J. L. ANDERSON, Supt.

We have been informed that Mr. John Brett will judge the waterfowl at the Boston Show. If any one breeder knows the duck and goose family, it is the good natured John Brett. He has bred many varieties of waterfowl and as to Pheasants, he is in a class by himself.

The Westchester Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association will hold a winter show January 16 to 19, 1907. All expenses are guaranteed and premiums will be paid the last day of the show. "Jim" Fitch is handling the press end of this show and he is star at this game. The hall selected is one of the best in the state, roomy and well lighted. Keep an eye on this show.

Mr. J. Harry Wolsiefer, formerly of Egg Harbor City, N. J., has moved to Hammondton in the same state, where he will begin the erection of a large commercial poultry plant being associated with Mr. George Goll of Philadelphia, Pa., who will furnish the capital. Mr. Wolsiefer has been very successful in building up a strain of White Wyandottes bred to lay eggs with a 200 per capita record. Careful selection has given him a goodly number of layers that can fill the requirements. Systematic trap-nesting was the method used to select the best layers, the Hogan system also coming in for a share of the credit. Brown eggs for the fancy market will be the object and aim at this new plant. When completed we shall give our readers a detailed description of the latter with Mr. Wolsiefer's methods of feeding and handling the layers and marketing the products.

Col. T. J. O'Donohue, proprietor of the beautiful Meadowbrook Farm, Shrewsbury, New Jersey, is branching out in the poultry business and is going in quite strong for White Leghorns. He purchased a goodly bunch at the recent sale of stock at Firenzi, Elberon, N. J., and then secured a fine lot of yearlings and pullets from Mr. R. L. Hutchings. These birds will be added to his regular flocks of layers and increase the capacity of his practical end of the plant considerably. On a recent visit to his place we found Mr. Smith, his able poultry manager, busy from morn till night looking after the growing crop of broilers, for there must be a big output each month to supply an exacting private trade in New York city. The new brooder house, built on plans of Mr. Smith, is proving a great success, the heating arrangement being the best we have even seen. Cleanliness and systematic feeding and handling of the chicks are features at this place. All the feed is ground and mixed on the place, in fact all the work is done by Mr. Smith and his assistant. In addition to the practical end of the business are the numerous fancy varieties such as pheasants and waterfowl, to say nothing of the numerous guineas and turkeys roaming about. There are but few idle moments for the manager and his help on the farm, but the latter take pride in their work, the same as Col. O'Donohue does in his stock, whether it is a fine Guernsey cow, thoroughbred horse, sheep or swine, or fine feathers. Unlike many New Yorkers who own fine farms in the country, Mr. O'Donohue is in touch daily with what is going on at Meadowbrook. It is not simply a summer residence and recreation for him, but an all year round study, pleasure and business as well.

Our correspondent in Albany, N. Y., informs us that no definite arrangements have been made for a show in the state capital up to the present time, but the indications are that the third annual exhibition will be held late in the season.

A subscriber in Canada writes: I am a breeder of Black Cochin Bantams and have been getting my stock through one of your advertisers. The stock is all right, but the young birds seem rather tightly feathered I thought perhaps I have not been feeding right. My principal feed is wheat and cracked corn with table scraps. If you will advise me on the matter you will favor me very much. I did not pen the chicks up and thought maybe they had too much run." The above feed seems good enough for any chicken, although some Cochin Bantam fanciers are very successful in feeding mixed foods, using a high grade meat scrap in the mixture. Milk is another excellent food to use with the prepared foods or with a home made mixture of coarse cornmeal, wheat bran and barley meal, one-third of each in bulk. Range is not desirable and when birds are roaming about too much, the desired volume of feathering will be lacking. We shall be glad to hear from some of our Bantam fanciers on this subject of feeding for softness and volume of feather.

Mr. Joseph Shull has returned to his home in Johnstown, N. Y., after a long trip south with W. A. Smith, assisting the latter in exhibiting his big string of birds. "Joe" writes the trip proved very successful, although only three big fairs were taken in after Hagerstown. Mr. Smith of Whitney's Point, N. Y., has been an annual exhibitor at Southern fairs a great many years and carried away hundreds of premiums and dollars as well. But Smith never takes a poor string of birds south. He has been educated not to. Fanciers in the Southland know good birds when they see them, as some northern exhibitors and dealers have found out. We have seen birds sent south by some of the traveling showmen that have proved simply a waste of time and entry fees. There were better birds exhibited at these fall shows that were raised in the South. We have watched with interest the change in the quality of some of the popular varieties, i. e., in birds purchased of northern breeders to be exhibited at Southern Shows. Years ago many a poor bird found its way South because the "big breeders" up this way thought the country and the fanciers were new in the game. The man that wins on Rocks and Wyandottes, no matter what variety, in the South, must have top notch birds. In Langshans the South once led the country in quality, and no doubt could to-day, if the grand old Langshan could be brought back to its former popularity of a decade ago.

We understand that Secretary Crawford has opened up a class for Black East India ducks at the Corning, New York, show, in order to draw out a good exhibit of these rare and beautiful web-footed members of the duck family. Quite a number are being bred near New York and we are curious to see what they look like when on dress parade at the Madison Square Garden. We have not seen a real small Black East India duck in a great many years and came to the conclusion the variety was extinct. The small Black Cayuga ducks shown as East Indias at fall shows bear no resemblance to the real simon-pure article.

Thanksgiving is at hand. So is the turkey. But judging by reports this famous American bird, which should grace the table of poor and rich alike on the day of thanksgiving, will be a rara avis. Prices are soaring upwards as will be seen by the following report from the New York Herald of November 20:

"As the time before Thanksgiving day becomes less and less the price of turkeys is becoming higher and higher, yesterday reaching the twenty-one cent wholesale mark, which is unusual for this early time.

Dealers agree that turkeys will be more expensive this Thanksgiving than in previous years, and it is estimated that housewives will have to pay as high as thirty-five cents a pound for the fowl at holiday time. The wholesale price was boosted two cents yesterday over that asked on Saturday morning. The retail price was increased even more. Turkeys could be purchased two days ago at eighteen cents wholesale.

Although the Eastern turkeys have not yet begun to descend upon the market, dealers assert that they can place no reliance on this year's supply. A plague, known as black head, has been sweeping the East, and thousands of turkeys have died from it. This has been evidenced particula in Northern New York. The gr of the Western supply, with which the local market is now fairly well stocked, is about the average quality, say the wholesale dealers.

Although the demand has been normal thus far, dealers state that they are having their hands full to meet it with high grade fowl. This demand, as always, is expected to increase daily, reaching its climax next Wednesday.

If the Eastern supply is diminished to a greater degree than anticipated at present, it is possible that many families will have to go turkeyless on Thanksgiving day—or else pay almost forty cents a pound for the bird.

Not a cheerful outlook for the man with lean purse and a hungry cravin Turkeys were high in price last season, in fact, prohibitive as far as the average purse was concerned. We remember not so many years ago, when fine young turkeys sold at one dollar each in old Missouri; and dressed at that. We also remember buying turkeys at eight cents a pound, live weight, in Northern New York. No doubt the demand has increased enormously, but we are of the opinion that the supply might have been much larger had farmers devoted more attention to the raising of turkeys, which in reality, is one of the most profitable branches of the poultry business. The early care of the turkey broods is what seems to frighten off the average farmer, but once the modus operandi is understood there is little or no trouble in raising the turkeys and after the first six weeks have elapsed the turk if allowed free range on good pastur and stubble fields, will shift for themselves and with the addition of some daily grain food within easy reach, the farmer may expect a profitable bunch of birds for the holiday market.

Owing to the inability of the Meriden Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock association to secure a suitable hall to hold a show, they have decided not to hold one this year. Therefore the New Haven County Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock association have taken the same dates claimed by them and will hold a show in Wallingford, Conn., December 29, 1906, to January 2, 1907; and they have secured the same judges, i. e., Messrs. Nichols, Card and Lambert.

The dates of the North Baltimor Ohio, show have been changed to February 5 to 9, 1907, so as not to conflict with the shows at Tiffin and Findlay, neighboring cities.

The premium list of the New York Show should be in the hands of every intending exhibitor. Those who have not received one should send at once to H. V. Crawford, Secretary, Montclair,

New Jersey. Entries close positively December 14, but should be sent in early if possible. In order to assist those who intend to exhibit we reprint the following from the premium list:

The entry fee for poultry and ducks in the open class is $3.00 per bird. Exhibition yards, $5.00.

All birds in the open classes must be in single coops. Exhibition yards may be sent in one coop.

Prizes for poultry and ducks in the open classes will be: First prize, $5.00; second prize, $3.00; third prize, $2.00. V. H. C., H. C. and C., when there are four or more birds in a class. When there are three or two birds in a class, the prizes will be $3.00, first; $2.00, second and V. H. C. When there is one bird in a class the prize will be $2.00. The entries in class 1 to 350 will be limited to 2300. Only four entries will be accepted from an exhibitor in one class.

Birds entered in the open classes cannot compete in the exhibition yards.

A limited number of large cages for display of collections not for competition will be rented for $20.00 each.

The classification is about the same as last year at New York. In some instances we believe the lid was put on too tight; in others there was too much liberality. Partridge Plymouth Rocks, a non-standard variety, receives four classes, as do Silver Pencilled Plymouth Rocks, another novelty. American Dominiques, La Fleche and Creve Coers get two classes each. The Campines, almost extinct, also receive four classes. The Ornamental Waterfowl division, one of the most attractive in the show, are not liberally treated. Otherwise little or no fault can be found with the list. Taken all in all, it is the greatest book ever issued by the New York Poultry-Pigeon Association, barring the mistakes in proof reading, which was not the fault of Secretary Crawford, but of the printer, we are informed.

Entries for the big Johnstown Show close November 28. Get them in on time. Barney W. Mosher, Johnstown, New York, is the secretary.

According to the conditions governing the Ivory Soap Cup Special in the New York premium list: "Exhibitor must be washed with Ivory Soap, and so noted upon entry form at time of entry. Competition is confined to winners of first in representative classes." This should prove a great treat for the judges, when they award this famous prize. All the exhibitors must be white, of course, and in first class condition. Deacon Ivory Sparks certainly has sprung a good one on the exhibitors and judges this trip.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 22, 1906.

CAIRO, N. Y.

The exhibit of poultry at the Greene County Agricultural Fair, held at Cairo, N. Y., excelled, in quality, that of any previous year, and every coop in that department was filled. There were large classes in Barred and White Rocks and the competition keen.

In Mediterraneans, the White and Buff Leghorns took the lead with quality to burn, while in the English class the Orpingtons led, and the winners were birds of exceptional quality.

N. D. Ford, of Albany, judged.

Below are the awards:

BARRED ROCKS—Fowl 1 P. E. Chichester, Oak Hill, N. Y., 2 Hedges Farm, East Durham; cockerel 1 Hedges Farm, 2 O. W. Moore, Durham.

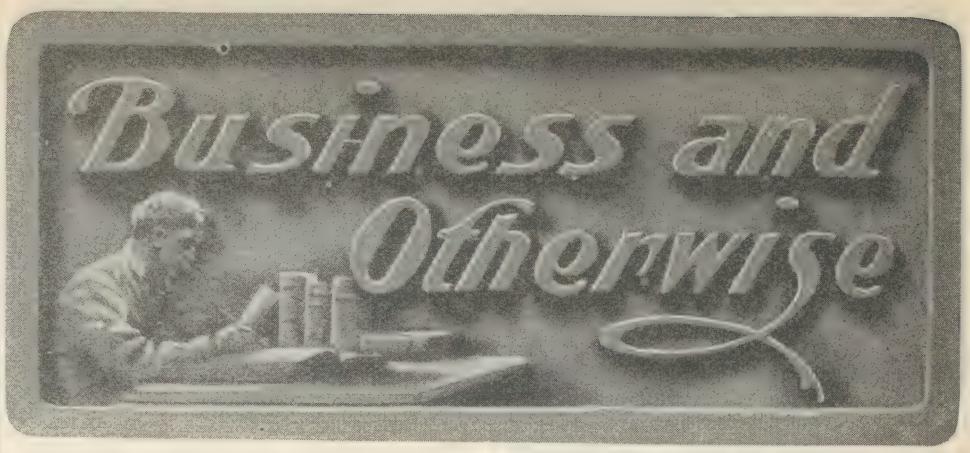
THE LITITZ, PA., SHOW.



The fourth annual Poultry and Pigeon show to be held at Lititz, Pa., during holiday week will be a record breaker for the Keystone state. In addition to the long line of regular and special premiums heretofore offered, some new features have been added.

The fourth annual will be a ribbon show, ribbons that will be well worth winning, too. The special prizes number several hundred, about half of them cash. One new feature is that whenever an exhibitor shows ten specimens in any one variety a grand special souvenir badge will be awarded. A Pet Stock department has also been added, with liberal and special premiums.

Lititz calls itself the people's show, and spares neither labor nor expense to satisfy its exhibitors and visitors. Outsiders first, the association last, is its motto. If you wish to learn more about up-to-date association and its show write to Secretary Bruckart for a premium list.

FRANKFORT, N. Y.

The second annual show of the Mohawk Valley Poultry and Pet Stock Association will be held in Frankfort, N. Y., Feb. 5-8 inclusive. Everything points to a successful show this winter. The Empire Cooping Co. of Fultonville has been engaged to coop the show. The show this year will be held in the Frankfort Opera House, a large, well-lighted hall. Three well-known judges have been engaged, whose names will appear later. The premium list will be out about Jan. 1st, 1907.

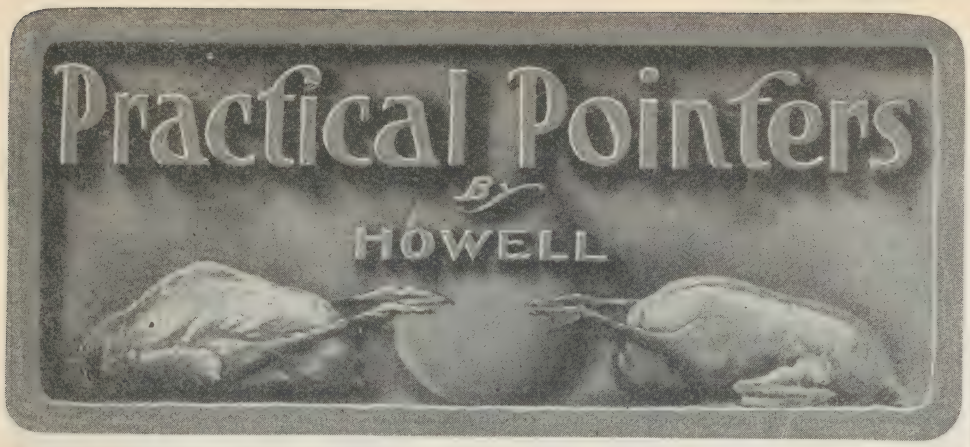
COLORED PICTURE FREE.

On the receipt of fifty cents we will send the American Fancier every week for the period of six months. This covers the coming show season, and as all shows, big and little, are reported each week in the American Fancier, readers will know who is doing the winning and keep posted. In addition to this we will present each new subscriber with a handsome colored picture, suitable for framing, free. This beautiful colored plate was made from a painting by Louis P. Graham of the Champion Buff Plymouth Rock Male in America. It is a work of art and should be in every collection of fine poultry pictures.

Advertisements close Tuesday noon each week.

Every breeder and exhibitor needs a new edition of the American Standard of Perfection. Price $1.50. Can be obtained from the American Fancier office.

The handsome colored supplement of America's great Buff Rock male, reproduced from Louis P. Graham's beautiful painting, can be had for ten cents. It's worth a handsome frame. Send a dime to the American Fancier office and you will get one by return mail.



We sell all the leading publications devoted to poultry, pigeon and pet stock culture. Send for a list.

Readers will oblige us greatly by sending personal news items of interest to this locality. It will get our readers in all sections acquainted with each other.

Secretaries of poultry and pigeon exhibitions will confer a favor by sending in their reports and awards as promptly as possible. We want the news when it is news.

Try a six line classified advertisement for a year. It costs less than twenty-five cents a week. It's a winner.

The best readers and fanciers are the best buyers. This is the class that patronize the American Fancier.

Last week I told how the weather man had slighted this section of the country by not giving us a snow storm.

There is no further cause for complaint on that score, an all day and night snow and two days of blow following has put the chicken business on the frazzle, and caused an almost complete stoppage of egg production.

At such times the man with the yarded flocks comes in ahead. He will experience a fifty percent falling off, but the flocks on range will quit completely under forced confinement.

Personally we were taken at a disadvantage, with a half completed house to contend with, and but few permanently housed; there had to be a general rounding up of young stock. They staid right where the storm overtook them and had to be gathered in from all quarters.

A brother fancier just experiencing his first season of shipping direct, says what's the use of a forty cent market, when one has none to ship?

Same may all be true, but there is a lot of satisfaction in knowing one is hustling for a good thing, when coaxing the pullets to get down to business.

Now here is a great hen authority consuming columns of a contemporary's space, and the patience of their readers telling how he is building a hen house.

A two story house sided and sealed, outside packed with sawdust all around, in fact everything that is expensive and consumes time in constructing.

The average builder is not looking for an elephant, it is a poor way to encourage new recruits, the low cost house, convenient and serviceable, is what promotes the industry, something from which the beginner can hope to get back his money.

Speaking of houses, it is wonderful the amount of cold a fowl can stand as long as all draughts are excluded.

Plenty of business and they will lay right along when the thermometer is so low the egg will freeze in a short time, if left in the nest.

I would rather have a clean house well filled with litter than so much extra siding.

As I have often said, care and attention outweigh expensive and complicated buildings.

Once the cold weather comes, get the pullets in their permanent house, so should they start to lay, it will be with regularity.

Despite this advice so freely given, the easy going fancier is prone to allow them to occupy either the brood coop or convenient tree.

They outgrow the coops but still crowd in, and the extra warmth from the constantly increasing size of their bodies turn them into an oven. They come out in the early morning sweating, a cold wind strikes them, and a swelled eye results, if nothing worse. With the tree it is hot and cold, alternately, with like results.

About the feed, give a variety, as great a variety as possible, but don't swap feeds; stick to the one thing should it prove worthy.

It is poor advice to recommend corn meal as a basis for the mash, then add corn products, should be cut out of the grain ration, rather more cracked corn and less corn meal.

NEW YORK MARKET.

EGGS.—Receipts were 8,976 cases. Sales under the call of the exchange were four 25-case lots of western firsts, delivered, spot, at 33c; two 50 and two 100-case lots of refrigerator seconds, delivered, at 21½c. The summer-like weather has greatly interfered with market conditions, but there were no changes made in late prices. The proportion of new laid in current receipts is still small, but trade has been checked by the high price, and despite the smallness of the arrivals, sellers find it easy to fill orders. The movement in storage eggs is good, and a firm tone is noted on Aprils, but for late packing prices are as irregular as is the quality offered.

DRESSED POULTRY.—Receipts, 1,963 packages. The weather was warm and checked the demand for nearly all varieties. Spring turkeys were in excessive supply and prices eased off 1c. Ohio and Michigan scalded chickens showed signs of weakness at the opening, and with indifferent demand, sellers were obliged to reduce prices ½c. There were no changes made in fowls. The offerings of strictly fancy quality were moderate, and prices were not defined closely enough to warrant a place in quotations. Average run sold in a range of 12@12½c. Large sizes of ducks were firm and fairly active. Geese were quiet.

NATIONAL COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTE CLUB.

Editor American Fancier:

The National Columbian Wyandotte club has offered one silver cup and eight ribbons at Madison Square Garden show this winter. Besides this, the members have done nobly by giving Silver Cups, and $40.00 in cash, divided in $2.00 prizes. This seems a good way to give cash, as it calls out birds that will be strong in color, as well as shape, and one may win one of these specials even if he doesn't win a regular prize. This, we hope, will call out a big entry at the Garden. The Club also gives a Silver Cup and eight ribbons at Auburn, N. Y., for the A. P. A. meets there. Boston and Chicago get the same. The members have given some specials at these shows, but the Garden Show seems to be the favorite show with the Columbians, and the favorite battlefield on which to fight for the honors. These specials are for the members of the Club only. Anyone can compete by joining the Club before January 1st, by sending $2.00 to the Secretary-Treasurer. The club also gives eight ribbons to about twenty showing one each for best shaped male and female. One each for best colored male and female, and one each for best cock, hen, cockerel, and pullet.

A FIRST-CLASS BONE CUTTER.

The marked increase in egg production caused by feeding cut green bone, has resulted in the placing on the market of numerous machines for the production of this material.

Competiton in the bone cutter business has become so keen, that it is interesting to note the superior advantages possessed by the Standard Bone Cutter, manufactured by the Standard Bone Cutter of Milford, Mass.

Some of the especially good features of their machines are the positive automatic feed, horizontal cylinders and the knives in the cutter plate being always in view. These knives are arranged in such a way as to cut across the grain of the bone. It is claimed these three points give this machine superior excellence over any other bone cutter at present manufactured, and this is the only machine possessing a positive automatic feeding arrangement.

This concern has been in this line of business for fourteen years and has established a reputation for fair dealing which places it among the reliable institutions of the country. They ship their machines on trial and if the purchasers do not find them exactly as represented, they offer to refund the money. Some of the larger firms engaged in the wholesale production of cut green bone are numbered among their customers. Among these might be mentioned such concerns as the Consolidated Rendering Co. of Boston, Mass., who use Standard machines in their plants in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Any one contemplating the purchase of a bone cutter, should by all means send for the standard Bone Cutter catalogue, which will be sent free on request by addressing The Standard Bone Cutter Co. of Milford, Mass. When writing kindly mention this paper.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

By B. J. Hill.

S. W. Crosby, of Newton Falls, O., has as fine a flock of S. C. Brown Leghorns as is often seen, good in color and shape. Mr. Crosby raised about four hundred birds this year and he will have plenty of show stock to supply his customers. Mr. Crosby has been in the show room and is well known in the central states for this variety.

The Root Incubator Company of Cleveland, Ohio, has placed on the market an incubator and a brooder that is really different, not a freak machine in any way, but a machine that looks good, and they have letters on file and exhibited to the writer that indicate that they do the trick. The inventor, Mr. Ralph Root, is a practical poultryman and these machines are the result of nine years' modification of the first machine he built. The brooder particularly appealed to the writer in so much as the hoover is entirely done away with.

THE CHICAGO SHOW.

The annual Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Show to be held in Chicago Jan. 23d to 30th inclusive, 1907, will be an improvement on any of the series of high-class shows heretofore held under the management of the National Fanciers' and Breeders' Association. The exhibits of stock, incubators, brooders, appliances, foods, remedies and all things pertaining to the poultry, pigeon and pet stock industry have at all times taxed to the utmost the capacity of the largest hall obtainable. The attendance of visitors, always great, was phenomenally large last year. Plans are now being perfected to make the exhibition, whether from the standpoint of the exhibitor, the visitor or the management, better than ever before.

Premium lists, giving names of judges and the varieties to be passed upon by each of them, and all necessary information to intending patrons, will be issued about Dec. 15th, 1906. Twenty thousand will be mailed out and it is the intention to have one sent to every interested person, but if for any reason it is not received or additional copies are desired, write to the secretary, Fred L. Kimmey, 325 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

AUBURN GETS STATE POLISH CLUB CUP.

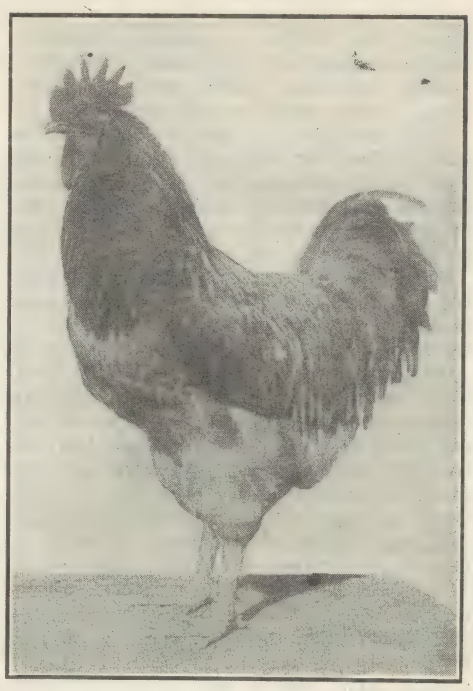
By vote of the state members of the American Polish Club, the silver loving cup offered annually by the above mentioned club will be competed for at the Auburn Show, January, '07. This cup is open to competition to members in good standing residing in this state, and as usual will be placed on best display any one variety Polish. Breeders of Polish who desire to compete for this cup, as well as other specials should send their names with $1.00 membership fees to M. V. Caldwell, secretary and Treasurer, Leetonea, Ohio, or George E. Winters, state vice-president, Westhampton Beach, L. I., N. Y.

THE NATIONAL S. C. BLACK ORPINGTON CLUB.

The National S. C. Black Orpington Club was organized November 10, for the benefit of S. C. Black Orpington breeders. Its object is to exploit the sterling qualities of the breed and advance its interests in every possible manner. It stands every S. C. Black Orpington breeder in hand to join and assist in making this one of the largest specialty clubs in the country. Annual due $1.00, or $10.00 life membership.

The officers are: President, W. L. Davis; vice-president, O. A. Bogardus; secretary-treasurer, Joe Coleman: executive committee, Wm. P. Palmer, C. E. Vass, C. V. Byers and the president and secretary of the club.

State vice-presidents are as follows: New York, Dr. D. M. Sherwood; Ohio, H. Beck; Indiana, D. N. Foster; New Jersey, C. E. Vass; Pennsylvania, Samuel Gibson; New Hampshire, J. E. Duston; Missouri, C. A. Emry; Maryland, Wm. P. Palmer; Kentucky, O. A. Bogardus; Illinois, Geo. Whitelaw; Massachusetts, Maurice F. Delano.



Breeders desiring membership address the secretary-treasurer, Joe Coleman, Bellville, Ohio.

THE CLEVELAND SHOW.

There is great enthusiasm in Cleveland over the show which is to be held in January. A year ago the interested business men of Cleveland formed an association on a strong financial and business basis, and pulled off a show last February that was a remarkable success financially and otherwise. This year they have a nice balance in the treasury and are planning to pay all the premiums before the close of the show.

A great many cups have been secured and the prizes throughout are attractive. If large entries in the various classes, hospitable treatment, and a thorough good time are appreciated, don't forget the Cleveland show.

The date is January 14th to 19th at Gray's armory. The poultry judges will be Chas. McClave, Thos. F. Rigg, Eugene Sites and M. S. Gardner, and the pigeon judges L. A. Jansen and Chas. Lang. Entries close January 7th. Obtain premium list from F. L. Gruehl, Sec'y, 9902 Woodland Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

WHITE WYANDOTTES AT BOSTON.

The White Wyandotte class at the coming Boston Show promises to be a record breaker, as the National White Wyandotte Club has prepared a list of $400.00 in specials for this show, which added to the $100.000 offered by the Boston management in regular and special prizes will make a total of $500.000 to be competed for by the exhibitors of this popular variety. Mr. W. R. Graves of Springfield, Mass., president of the club, has called the annual meeting for Wednesday, January 16, at 4 p. m. Every person interested in White Wyandottes should secure a copy of the Boston premium list, which may be had free by addressing the show secretary, S. H. Roberts, South Attleboro, Mass.

The Jacobin article by John Waters in the last issue of The Fancier should bring out ideas of all the leading Jacobin exhibitors. It is now the right time to have all these points discussed. The judging of Jacobins at the coming New York show, the annual meeting place of the club, will be watched with interest to all. Mr. Koehler will probably face the best collection of this variety yet brought out and should handle the classes satisfactory to all.

* * * * *

Mr. Robt. Joos will judge the Magpies at New York. Mr. Ingram was booked to judge this variety, but at the last moment the Magpie Club sent its choice, Mr. Joos. In Mr. Joos the Magpie fanciers have selected a gentleman familiar with the breed and should give a good account of himself. Interesting to have a western judge handle the classes at a leading eastern show. The eastern Magpie breeders are well prepared to meet their western rivals, and when they meet things should be lively.

* * * * *

In an open letter published in one of our contemporaries, The Pigeon News, Mr. H. W. Cate desires to know just where the birds not plaited and laced will stand under Mr. Johnson, at the coming Boston. He also refers to the white classes at the last Boston Show.

This question has often been repeated by all who have been in "Fantail alley." We are sure most of the present day fanciers, or rather beginners, don't really know what the term lacing means. Plaited tails are tails merely smoothed over and feathers placed in their proper position, but lacing is entirely different. In passing judgment on Fantails, would it be right for Mr. Johnson, or any other judge, to pass a bird with elegant body, station, style, plenty of length of tail feather, just because that bird was properly shown, the tail having been cared for. No! and such will always be the case.

Fantails will be shown at New York and Boston prepared for the show, and after the awards are placed birds combining both body properties and evenly spread tails will be in the money. Fantails are a variety which need proper care and attention, and the young fancier who gives this an important part in his hobby will be the one who will show birds that are in the money.

No matter how good your birds are, if allowed to fly about the loft will spoil themselves in little time.

Don't cry about faking, but after you really own a first-class show specimen, do your part and put him in the pen to the best of your ability.

Worcester, Mass., will have another show, January 23-26. Worcester has held many good exhibitions and should join the list with a good turnout in 1907.

Wm. J. Stanton will judge the Carriers at the Garden this year. It has been some time since Wm. J. has handled this variety at a large show, but after the ribbons are placed, the best will be mentioned.

The Oriental Frill classes at the Garden will be handled by Mr. Geo. D. Hart. Although not on the list of judges in the premium list, Mr. Hart will officiate.

Silver medal for the best Fantail in the show, owned by a member of the Eastern Fantail Club.

HIGHFLYERS.

It is now almost a farce to apply the name of tumbler to these pigeons. Not many years ago they really used to tumble, especially when ascending or descending, but then they did not fly nearly as long as they do now; four hours was considered a good fly, and five as something very out of the way; although birds that tumbled much or rolled down from the kit have always been objected to by fanciers of high flyers as tending to entice downwards the birds flying with them. But this, by means of selective breeding and by various out-crosses, has been almost entirely got rid of, and high flyers now tumble so seldom that in speaking or writing of them the word tumble may well be entirely omitted.

A kit of high flyers requires much care and constant attention to bring them to anything approaching perfection, and they are therefore a hobby most suited to those who have much leisure to devote to them, or to those whose daily work compels them to be much at home.

All the most successful and best-known fanciers of high flyers have their own system of feeding and training their birds, with various secrets, nostrums and recipes for increasing and maintaining their staying powers; but by carefully observing the first and generally-known rules of the art, anyone will be able to get well-bred birds to fly for a considerable time, and then by practice, experience and friendly competition he will learn the individual peculiarities of his pets, and those little nothings which contribute so greatly to success as to enable the older fanciers to smile at a tyro's attempts to beat them.

The colors of the birds most employed in this sport are black, red and Badges. In these the ten primary flight feathers should be white, with a sprinkling of white feathers upon the head, and all the rest of the plumage of a rich and uniform color; whole-feathered birds of the same colors, and also sometimes "white-wings" or "white-sides" of them. In these the head, neck, breast, back, tail, and primary flight feathers should be colored to a line across the breast, and all the rest of the plumage white. All these are preferred when inclined to be long-faced. But, after all, a first-rate performer cannot in any way be distinguished by its appearance—just as in working homers, and I have seen a most unpromising-looking bird, which in a pen did not look worth tenpence, when on the wing would command almost any money.

It is the work of years to get together a stud of really first-rate high flyers, and when they have at length been obtained and trained, they may, almost any day, make use of their wings to fly away, never to return.

The best way to make a start is to obtain four or five pairs of strong early-bred youngsters from a successful and established strain, and also two or three pairs of steady old performers to act as instructors for these.

Now for the loft or rather the lofts, for it is most desirable to have two of them, one to breed in and the other to fly from. The breeding loft cannot be too large, and must be perfectly dry. This latter point is most essential, for these pigeons, although very hardy after their first moult, are rather difficult to rear to that age under any but the most favorable circumstances. I like the nest places to be on the floor of the loft, and made by leaning a bit of board up against a corner. The floor of the loft is best made of wood, painted to prevent it becoming damp from the droppings and scraped out daily, or covered an inch or more deep in fine sharp sand, which can be raked over and sifted as required. Whichever system be selected, the birds must be kept thoroughly clean or they will not thrive.

The loft from which the birds are flown must not be too large; 6 feet square and 8 feet high is a good size. It should be fitted with a window that can be darkened, ample means of ventilation, a good sized trap, and saddle perches round the walls. The floor must be kept scrupulously clean, and the whole place be dry, airy and yet free from draughts. I once heard Mr. John Frame, the great Jacobin breeder, say that draughts and ventilation were as inseparable as brandy and soda water; but I think that by making your holes for ventilation as high up as possible, and by taking care that no birds perch near them, this difficulty may be so far overcome that the birds shall take no harm from the currents of air so necessary to their well-being.

The old-fashioned way of keeping high flyers in their flying loft was to pen them separately in little pens. But pens or shelves only prevent the birds from taking any exercise when shut up in their loft, they make the place more troublesome to clean thoroughly, and so tend to prevent the success of the kit; for unless high flyers are kept perfectly clean no good can be done with them. If high flyers are allowed to become dirty they will never be strong, healthy, or able to fly for any length of time.

Twelve or fourteen birds are plenty to fly together as one kit. The usual method of proceeding is to select from three to five pairs of the best old birds as breeding stock, and these, although unable to fly as long as the youngsters, will sometimes prove invaluable to "drop" birds that are flying. By turning out these old birds you may often succeed in doing this, as the birds in the air will come down to them if they catch sight of them. This is especially useful if bad weather is coming, young birds may be saved that nothing could replace.

Still clear weather is the best for high flying, and if the birds are let out in changeable weather a great risk is run of losing them altogether; indeed, it is such "fly-aways" that are the heart-breaking drawback to this sport. The reasons for these are only partly understood. Sometimes it appears as if the birds were absolutely too good and too well trained; they are so full of "go" when first started that they will at times bolt off right away from home, and get so far away from their loft before they find themselves out of their reckoning that they are unable to hit off the right direction in attempting to return; or when the weather is very calm, birds in extra good fettle will go up so high that they either lose sight of their home or make some mistake in attempting to return to it—at any rate, they get lost; or a cloud or fog will hide home from their view, or snow or hail will absolutely beat and drive them away.

If hens are flown during the breeding season they cannot be depended on to fly steadily, but are likely to take it into their head to come down at any moment. Rather fly half a dozen old cocks and the same number of early bred youngsters. Most hens will fly fairly well whilst their squabs are from two to four weeks old, but never expect birds to fly hard and breed well at the same time.

Ten o'clock in the morning is generally early enough to turn out birds, as by that time you will generally be able to make a pretty good guess as to what sort of weather it is to be during the day; but if your birds are in training for a match, or flying for very long hours, then you should start them when the sun is well up, eight o'clock or earlier and run the risk that bad weather inevitably brings to the kit. When smoke rises straight up from the chimneys, when the swallows fly high or when the air is bright and frosty, the day is a good one for high flying. You will find that on still bright days the birds will go up into the sky until almost out of sight, but in windy weather they will, on the contrary, keep down as low as they can for shelter, but will still continue flying, that is if they are good birds bred from the right stuff, and in moderate training. A kit cannot continue flying for many hours under a broiling sun, so when the weather is very hot the birds should be turned out as early in the morning as possible, or else late in the afternoon, say at from three to four o'clock.

When high flyers are deep in moult they are best kept at home. Great care should at all times be taken not to turn out with the kit any birds that either can not or will not fly, for by their coming down to their loft or perching on chimneys they demoralize the remainder of the kit and prevent them learning what is expected of them. When the flying kit is well up in the air be careful not to let out any of your other birds, as that is just the way to bring the kit down again.

PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCKS at Owen Farms include the entire flock of the late H. W. Graves. This strain has produced more winners for the leading shows than all other strains combined. The finest flock of this strain ever raised is now on our farms. Our Buff and Barred Rocks are equally good, and we offer you sure winners, and good breeding birds of all three varieties that will please you. Our illustrated catalogue is yours for the asking, and will tell you about our farms and our birds. Owen Farms, Box J, Vineyard Haven, Mass. 677-728

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCKS. FISHEL'S are the best in the world, winning more prizes at World's Fair than any other two White Rock exhibitors. My new 48-page catalogue is the finest poultry catalogue ever issued. Send three 2-cent stamps for a copy. 5,000 birds to sell. Address U. R. Fishel, Box D, Hope, Ind. 643-694

EDDY'S BUFF ROCKS EXCLUSIVELY.—I have three hundred breeders mated for best results. Extra good layers. Eggs, special mating, three dollars per thirteen; regular $2 layers, $1. Discount on large orders. The Poplars, D. B. Eddy, Prop., Somerset, Mass. 643-694

CANADA'S BEST BARRED and BUFF Rocks.—I have mated some of the grandest specimens of these two varieties that can be found. Will give excellent value in eggs and stock. Fine illustrated catalogue on application. Eggs, $3.00 and $5.00 per setting. Stock for sale. J. R. Boyce, Box 412, London, Canada. 647-698

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS. Bradley Bros. Strain pure. Over 500 birds for sale, old and young, with quality to win in any company. Catalogue with photographs of my winners and list of winnings free. Blue Barred Farm, F. H. Castner, Propr., Glen Gardner, N. J. R. F. D. 1.

WHITE WYANDOTTES

Have been carefully SELECTED, APPRAISED and PRICED. These are in our fitting house for development and preparation for SHOW. Will be SHOWN, SOLD or BRED.

This lot of sixty is, we believe, the best we have ever seen belonging to ONE FARM.

We have about 500 young and old, most of which will be sold at prices much less than the choice birds referred to above.

WE WANT NAMES

We want YOU to send us the names and addresses of from ten to twenty-five persons living in the United States, each one having twenty-five hens or more. You can send us the names from any number of different postoffices. If you will send us these names we will send you TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES FREE. These pictures are reproductions of the most celebrated paintings in the world, and they are of high quality, and we know that you will be pleased and delighted with them; no pictures will be given for a list of less than ten names.

We want to send a free sample copy of a special issue of the HOME MONTHLY (The National Poultry Journal), to a lot of poultry raisers who are not now taking our paper and for that reason we want these names.

Send us immediately a list of at least ten poultry raisers and we will mail you postpaid, ABSOLUTELY FREE, TWO REPRODUCTIONS OF THE WORLD'S FAMOUS PICTURES, beautiful colors, size 15x20 inches. Address: THE HOME MONTHLY, 20 North William St., New York.

TUTTLE'S ROSE COMB RHODE ISLAND REDS

Having sold all my low-priced females, will reserve the rest for breeders for the egg trade next spring. Am now offering good breeding cockerels for $3 to $15.
